According to police nine of the relatives later stormed the group's West North Ave. headquarters and abducted some of the children.

Police records show based on that knowledge several officers entered the boarded house and arrested members of the organization. Officers state they seized several nude pictures from the occupants most of whom were naked on the arrival of police.

The organization whose members wear military fatigues, has allegedly been in existence for 13 years and has branches all across the country.

night of his own horse, Nancy, and General George Washington's favorite steed, Old Nelson.

On one Christmas Eve, in the crisp of winter with snow falling hard, covering the young child, Jocko was in the military camp when he heard a nearby horse nervously neighing and stamping.

Curious, Jocko went to the horse and found that it was Old Nelson. He talked to the animal as he had often done with his own and quieted him. They became quick friends. Although this was the coldest night Jocko could ever remember, he stayed with the horse, protecting him from the enemy.

After he became the first president of the United States, George Washington ordered that a likeness of Jocko be placed outside his home. It is that likeness which we see in front of many homes, restaurants and inns today.

Earl Koger Sr., author of the book, was a successful businessman in Baltimore before devoting his time to writing materials for black children and publishing a bi-weekly newspaper for the black community.

He has been interested in the legend of Jocko for many years and in 1968, he published an opera about the heroic lad's life.

Mr. Koger has received many awards for his writing and publishing activities including induction into the AFRO Honor Roll. He and his wife, Dorothy, are parents of five children.

Illustrator Don Miller has over 30 children's books to his credit. A horseman and avid black history buff, Mr. Miller's two interests merge in Jocko to create stunningly beautiful color pictures.

Mr. Miller, director of Black Studies at Seton Hill University, lives in Montclair, N.J. with his wife, Judy, and two teenaged sons.

that the owners, Charlotte and Daniel Walter, take "affirmative steps" to eliminate the effects of past racial discrimination if the allegations are upheld in United States District Court.

According to Dickens Warfield, president of Baltimore Neighborhoods, Inc. (BNI), a civil rights agency, the Justice Department's investigation and action was triggered when BNI forwarded testing results which alleged racial discriminatory practices.

Don Miller, associate director of BNI, said, "To my knowledge, this is the first known legal action by the Justice Department against a bar in the Baltimore area.

"I would certainly encourage any persons who feel they are being discriminated against to call BNI at 243-6007."

Man trapped in chimney eight hours

A 35-year-old man spent eight hours trapped in a chimney before being rescued by the police June 14 was saving. He was the 300 block N. Pulaski St., told police. "I don't know why I was on the roof and all I can remember is that I fell into the chimney."

Police report neighbors in the 1500 block W. Fayette St. said they heard cries for help coming from a vacant house at 1593 W. Fayette St., but did not want to become involved."

Police state after they pulled the wood boards off the front entrance of the house and entered the living room, they saw the arm of a person "sticking out of a brick chimney and heard a man asking for help."

Firefighters had to break through the sealed brick base of the chimney to rescue Shropshine. Police report Shropshine fell about 45 feet down the 30 inche wide chimney from the roof.

Police reveal Shroopshine was in shock and stuttering so bad that they could not understand what he was saying. He was treated at Bon Secours Hospital and later released.

felt by mothers who are city crossing guards.

In this, the Councilman was not alone, for even though they voted in favor of the cuts, both Councilman Dr. Emerson R. Julian and Michael Raven Mitchell agree that the cut should not necessarily lead to layoff of city employees.

* * *

In Councilman Mitchell's view the cut should not result in detrenchment but in judicious purchase of equipment and maintenance of existing ones. Dr. Julian said he does not think the mayor's threat to layoff workers is valid and expressed the hope the council can get by on that score.

"If there are any layoffs at all it must be done not from the bottom but from the top. We have too many supervisors."

"Attacking the Police Department as a rambling agency, Councilman Mitchell described as "ridiculous and absurd" Mayor Schaefer's support of the Police Commissioner Pomeleau and his SIU.

The Council cut money from 36 different agencies and eliminated 10 small capital projects, including the construction of a landfill on Bayview Ave. in East Baltimore.

Agencies that received the largest cuts were Education, ($1.75 million), City Hospitals ($1 million), Public Works ($1 million), and Police (550,000). However, the Council's most controversial action was the elimination of the entire $1.7 million appropriation for the city's 408 school crossing guards.

Councilman Burns said the guards elimination was his main reason for voting against the cuts. He told about two mothers, one of whom cannot take her daughter on vacation and the other unable to go to Disneyland because of the threatened cut.

But Dr. Julian said he voted for the cut to tone down some of the inordinate tax burdens. He said he thinks the budget is reasonable.

Councilman Mitchell said last Monday's Council decision is a landmark in the history of the Council because it shows them as thinking individuals. "I feel good about it."
