Morris of Harrisburg, Pa., assessed the role of Gov. Lee at these hearings as:

"Gov. Lee demonstrated outstanding leadership by assisting in the settlement of 2 major challenges. Specifically in the Pennsylvania-Patrick challenge. Gov. Lee developed the formula which brought about a reasonable, responsible, solution to a very difficult challenge.

"Gov. Lee was personally responsible for the placement of three additional blacks to the Pennsylvania delegation."

MAYOR PRUITT

With regards to the merits of the committee hearings, Drayton Pruitt Jr., mayor of Livingston, Ala. said:

"The 1976 Credentials Committee illustrated a spirit of harmony in the Democratic Party, which in my opinion will win victory for the Democratic Party in November, 1976.

UNION LEADER

Mrs. Evelyn Dubrow, legislative director of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union AFL-CIO and member of the Credentials Committee for New York, remarked:

"I believe that the proceedings of the Credentials Committee were conducted intelligently, equitably and with thorough investigation of the changes before the committee.

"Senator Alan Cranston has done a fine job as chairman of the committee — being lenient when leniency helped to clarify the debate, but firm when the committee needed to be reminded of its reason for existence.

"The work of the staff should be commended for its preparation of materials and its assistance to the committee members.

"Altogether in my opinion, the committee has done itself and the Democratic Party, proud."

PUERTO RICO

Congressman Jaime Benitez of Puerto Rico stated that "I supported the hearing officer's recommendations because the Compliance Review Commission had studied the controversial situations, was fair and deserved the full endorsement of the body.

"We accept the legitimacy of the procedure and will abide by it and will support the Democratic candidate in November both in the U.S. and Puerto Rico."

VIRGINIA

Attorney Ruth Harvey Charity remarked, "The hearings before the Credentials Committee were characterized by a deep concern for the broadest participation of the Democrats. It was in this spirit that compromises could be made that were beneficial to both the individual participants and the Democratic Party.

"It was indeed gratifying that in certain instances these compromises resulted in the addition of black persons to the delegations for the National Convention."

MRS. ADAMS

This being my first time to sit as a permanent member of the Credentials Committee afforded me many lovely opportunities and look forward to going to New York just to continue deliberating challenges in a fair and impartial manner.

Mozambique celebrates her first year of independence

MAPUTO, Mozambique (UPI) — One year ago, June 25, Mozambique lowered the red and green flag of its Portuguese rulers and set out to create a new nation.

Its first year of independence has been a struggle against a chaotic economy, natural disasters and the burdens of still more jungle warfare—this time against the white Rhodesian government.

Despite the hardships, the people of Mozambique celebrated the anniversary with enthusiasm.

Festivities began last Thursday in Maputo with parades of goose-stepping soldiers and young people in white uniforms wearing bright red scarves to symbolize Mozambique's strong commitment to socialism. Thousands of cheering people lined the streets.

President Samora Machel, who led the bitter 10-year guerrilla war that help topple 40 years of Portuguese rule, received an overwhelming ovation from the crowd.

The streets were drapped with the red, green black and gold Mozambique flag, and banners proclaiming "Long live the people's struggle against Imperialism" and "We will continue to support the freedom struggle of the people of Zimbabwe (Rhodesia)."

The main event was a rally at the national stadium where Machel presided over last year's lowering of the portuguese flag.

When Mozambique was granted independence following the coup that toppled Portugal's right-wing dictatorship, machel vowed to destroy the colonial society and end privileges based on wealth or color.

Many of the country's 200,000 whites were alarmed and fled—taking with them most of the nation's technical skills.

The economy machel inherited was geared to serve the needs of Portugal and the neighboring white-ruled states of Rhodesia and South Africa.

The nation's problems were worsened by floods that caused severe food shortages. To date, there are fewer than 30 doctors to serve a population of 9 million.

Mozambique has also become the primary rear base for tens of thousands of Rhodesian black guerrillas—whose food and medical requirements have further exacerbated the nation's economic woes.

In February, Machel closed the border with neighboring Rhodesia and proclaimed a state of war after Rhodesian planes sent against black Rhodesian guerrillas bombed two villages in Mozambique.

The border closing deprived landlocked Rhodesia of what had been its major outlet to the sea. But it also put some 30,000 Mozambique citizens out of work.

Nigeria adopting U.S. prexy system

LAGOS, Nigeria — After 17 years as a sovereign nation, punctuated by tribal and political strifes culminating in a civil war and three successful coups by the armed forces, Nigeria is discarding the parliamentary system of government as exemplified by the British in preference to the presidential system of the United States.

The Nigerian military government has promised to hand over power to a civilian regime in 1979. If the military keeps to its promise to relinquish power, then, the civilian government that comes into office would have to be chosen along the lines of the presidential system of the U.S.

A constitutional drafting committee that has been deliberating for six months has recommended that a president run on the same ticket as the vice president, be elected by universal suffrage, serve a term of four years and execute laws passed by a national assembly of two chambers, a senate and a house of representatives.

The committee's report, due to be presented in September to the Supreme Military Council, the governing body, is expected to meet their approval. A constitutional assembly, yet to be elected, would then have to approve the document that finally emerges.

There is widespread feeling among committee members that a strong executive president with the advantage of at least a fixed term and the consent of a majority of voters, is preferable to the appointed prime minister, who in essence is only the leader of the majority party.

From independence in 1960 until a military coup in 1966, the Nigerian federation was run under a Parliamentary system fashioned after that of Britain, Nigeria's colonial ruler.

It was a period of shifting alliances among parties that were regionalized and tribalized, of chaotic and sometimes violent elections, and finally almost complete governmental paralysis.

"We're tired of the parliamentary system," said a member of the drafting committee. "It has been tried here and it has been a failure. The feeling was it would not be a bad idea to try something else.

A recurrent problem in Nigerian politics is how to control the latent hostility between ethnic groups, and particularly between North and South.

To discourage political parties from fragmenting along tribal lines, the draft constitution seeks to make them national parties. A party that receives less than five per cent of the vote would be abolished.

Cuban medical team aids Angolans

HUAMBO, Angola — Huambo, the Angolan city formerly known as Nova Lisboa, was once the stronghold of the western-backed National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, which was defeated by the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola last February, with the aid of Cuban troops and Soviet arms.

This once-prosperous central city has probably suffered most from the civil war that went hand in hand with Angolan independence last November.

The city now empty, is a ghost town. The large villas have been sacked and stand empty. The offices and shops, for the most part, are deserted, the windows shattered and the doors have been ripped open. Automobiles lie rusting in the streets and most of the city's factories have closed for lack of technicians.

But slowly, people are drifting back to the city, formerly the country's fastest growing industrial and farm center.

A year ago, the population, estimated at about 60,000 blacks and a matching proportion of whites, had dropped to a few hundred when the Popular Movement entered in February.

Now, it has grown to about 800 whites and 5,000 blacks.

Sources report that the only true signs of life in the city are the long lines of people at the train station, waiting to come or go, the lines in front of the few state grocery stores and the much longer line engulfing the beer store.

"If the Cuban doctors go when the Cuban troops pull out of Angola, we will all die," said an Angolan priest.

According to reports, a vast exodus of Portuguese doctors, nurses and technicians has taken place.

On March 7, a Cuban medical team was dispatched to the area after the victory of the Popular Movement, which now rules.

When the team arrived, there was only one Angolan doctor and a Red Cross mission serving 18 rural dispensaries. But the mission is soon to end operations, leaving only the doctor and the Cubans.

The Cuban medical team is replacing, as best they can, the Portuguese who fled. Cubans are said to be staffing central hospitals in 10 of the 16 provinces and hopes to extend teams into four more soon.

"We will stay as long as necessary," said Dr. Sanchiago Joo, an orthopedic surgeon who heads the Cuban team at Huambo Central Hospital.

The skeleton team is comprised of six doctors in addition to Dr. Joo — a gynecologist, pediatrician, ibrain, general surgeon, lung specialist, anesthesiologist and three nurses.

The Cubans also run the Huambo tuberculosis sanitarium and train Angolan nurses to give TB care in the surrounding villages.

"Under the Portuguese rule, people had to pay for hospital care and so many sick people didn't come to the hospital." Dr. Joo said. He explained that now, all consultations, medicine, treatment, room and board were free.

Dr. Joo was enthusiastic because he said when the medical team initially arrived, there was not enough work to do. But now, he said, the number of patients had increased.

According to Dr. Joo, Cuba now has medical teams in former Portuguese Guinea, Algeria, "Vietnam and Southern Yemen. We have enough doctors to spare with 800 or 900 graduates this year," he said.

"We could double our efforts here," Dr. Joo concluded.
