Media visits hospitals, colleges

By Georgianna Moody

Representatives from the media visited the Health and Education Complex in eastern Baltimore County on Dec. 2, to meet and see first hand the three-member institutions, Essex Community College, Franklin Square Hospital, the Baltimore City Health Department, and the people who run them.

David Sapadin, executive director of the Health and Education Council, described the council's function as a coordinating body of joint services and programs between a hospital, college, and public health department.

As a coordinating body of services and programs to the above three-member institutions, Sapadin said that the council is a unique organization which serves as a national model lending technical assistance to other potential groups.

The three-member consortium is able to provide physical, facilities, manpower, and on going educational and health programs in a comprehensive manner meeting the community need for physical, psychological and social health.

Dr. Thomas Crawdord, medical director of Franklin Hospital explained that the joint integration of the three-member institutions has helped to remove much of cost pressures of the hospital Furthe, manpower, and technical skills in areas that the Franklin Square Hospital does not have at the facility is provided one of the other tow members.

Dr. Crawford pointed to how the Health Department is able to provide a ful range of mental health services to the hospital. The colege helps in providing teachers in the Continuing Education Program for professionals in the health field.

Dr. Donald J. Roop, deputy state and county health officer of the County Health Department detailed a number of services of which the Department has benefited and derived from the creation of the council, especially an automatic system in the maintenance and keeping of records.

Essex Community College president, Vernon Wasey, Ph.D pointed out special programs and benefits of which the college has great respect for the council's assistance in the integration in identifying specialist in the field of placement and a number of other services.

There were refreshments and a tour of the college which consists of a 240-acre campus. Also a question period which allowed the press to ask any questions about this unique organization designed to meet needs (health) of local citizens.

The shared campus of the three institutions has made the philosophical union a physical reality, emphasizing the importance of cooperation in achieving the well-being of the community's populace. Each institution donates one-third of the financial core support for the coordinating Health and Education Council.

Additionally, the council obtains supoort from private foundations and federal and state agencies to develop specific programs which will either benefit the three institutions or the Current foundation support of the council includes a three-year grant of $401,154 from the W. K. Kellogg Foundation to set up a community center for Continuing Education, and a three-year grant of $261,503 from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation for Integration of health services.

A non-profit organization, the council has initiated several programs including: a community center for Continuing Education; a program in Occupational Lung Disease for Allied HealthProfesionals; Drug Abuse Program offering rehabilitation services for the drug user such as methadone maintenance, family counseling and vocational counseling; a Cervical Cancer Screening Clinic; Community Education Workshops on such topics as crisis intervention; and an upcoming program for the rehabilitation Patient Education Program of heart disease patients.

Tuscan Chicken casserole

Whether you plan Tuscan Chicken to use left-over chicken or, turkey during the holidays or as a special company dinner, it's a delight. Colorful and deliciously flavored, it's a dish to be served with pride.

TUSCAN CHICKEN

1 can (30 ounce) fruit cocktail
½ red onion, diced
4 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ pound mushrooms, sliced
2 tablespoons white or rose wine
2 cups cooked chicken or turkey strips
4 tablespoons flour
2 cups chicken broth
2 egg yolks
¼ cup cream or half and half
Cooked spaghetti

Drain fruit cocktail, saving ½ cup syrup. Saute onion in butter; add lemon juice, mushrooms and wine; add chicken and stir. Over low flame dissolve flour into paste by slowly adding fruit cocktail syrup; stir constantly.

Add chicken broth, continue stirring, remove from heat. Combine egg yolks with cream; add to sauce, stirring well. Return to low flame and add sauteed mixture and drained fruit. Spoon over hot spaghetti and garnish with parsley or fresh herbs, if desired.

MSU to develop African aid program

Dr. Andrew Billingsley, president of the Morgan State University, announced last week that the university plans to develop a comprehensive program to aid African countries with urban development

The announcement came last Wednesday afternoon following his return from a African-American conference held in Maseru, Lesotho, South Africa Nov. 29-Dec. 4.

According to Dr. Billingsley the university will begin to develop a seven point program in January in response to concerns raised by delegates who were present at the conference.

"Such an effort is a part of what Morgan and this state can do to help black African countries. We have a culture here in Maryland that is hospitable to this kind of effort," he said.

The program, which the university president wants supported with both federal and private funds would include such items as a student and faculty exchange program with black African nations; a research project to deal with developmental problems in Africa and better teaching materials on the project.

It will also include publishing materials on the project.

It will also include publishing information about African development; supplying African countries with technical assistance on setting up colleges and universities; assisting African nations in developing medical care and helping black African governments plan for urban development.

Billingsley said although the initial efforts for the program will begin in January he has not yet established a timetable for its full operation.

He stated he will begin by meeting with the school's African students and the faculty and students in the international studies' program.

Elderly plan Yule with students

Eighty-nine senior citizens from St. Francis Church will celebrate the holiday season with student members of Future Homemakers of America from Gwynns Falls Parkway Junior High and Western Senior High Schools at a Christmas party planned Dec. 21, from noon to 2 p.m. at the church on 1501 E. Oliver St.

The senior citizens are members of a nutrition and consumer education class taught by Vivian Salters, a teacher working in the area of Home Economics.
