Appeal made to give back schools equal treatment

The heads of the four predominantly black post-secondary schools in Maryland have made an urgent appeal to Dr. Sheldon Knorr, head of the State Board for Higher Education (SBHE) to deal equally with the black colleges during its 18 month investigation of higher education.

Appeal, submitted to Dr. Knorr in the form of a five-point position, comes in the wake of the state Senate's decision to reinstate $150,000 in state funds under the proposed $3.9 million budget to Bowie State College and Morgan State University (MSU), and the House's decision to cut $203,186 in funds to the same schools.

It also includes the SBHE decision to establish a task force to look into the possibility of merging the University of Maryland, Eastern Shore, (UMES) with nearby Salisbury State College.

Signed by Dr. William Hytche, chancellor of UMES; Dr. Samuel Myers, president of Bowie State; Dr. Andrew Billingsley, president of MSU and Dr. Calvin Burnett, president of Coppin State College, the paper offers the board a five-point approach to higher education in the state, which recommends:

1. That a statewide plan for educational equality be developed.

2. That the predominantly black institutions be viewed and treated in their proper role as positive features in the statewide system and as contributors to the Racial equality goals of the state and federal government;

3. That affirmative action programs be strengthened in the predominantly white institutions;

4. To enhance the black institution and desegregate the predominantly white institutions at all levels;

5. That the board (SBHE) recognize that the black institutions are leaders in racial integration in higher education and must strengthen these institutions.

The presidents also came out in support of UMES, which is presently part of the task force probe to merge the school with Salisbury State College.

The four black college heads pointed out to SBHE that the UMES is already part of the University of Maryland and urged that it remain a part of the five campus unit and "be developed as a viable unit of this university system."

They also asked that the board support the founding of new academic programs at UMES which include the Schools of Veterinary Medicine and Hotel and Restaurant Management and programs in Agribusiness and environmental studies as well as other graduate and professional programs.

The proposed Contract Documents may be examined, without charge at the office of the BUREAU OF ENGINEERING, Third Floor, Municipal Office Building, Baltimore, Maryland on and after April 7, 1977, and necessary copies thereof may be there obtained on payment of Twenty Dollars ($20.00), for each copy, which payment will not be refunded.

Senate kills bill creating consumer board

Consumer activists suffered a major legislative defeat when the State Senate killed a bill to create a Citizens Utility Board (CUB) which would represent consumers before regulatory agencies.

The bill was tentatively approved on a 26 to 18 vote, but sponsor Sen. Meyer Emanuel, D-Prince George's, asked that it be rejected because he objected to amendments by the Senate Economic Affairs Committee.

The CUB was intended to protect consumer interests in rate hearings and before the legislature. The board would be funded by voluntary contributions and was to complement the people's counsel to the Public Service Commission (PSC).

Emanuel particularly objected to an amendment to limit the CUB to one statewide mailing annually. Emanuel said that would prohibit the CUB from lobbying effectively.

"It would defeat the whole purpose," Emanuel said. "The utility companies send out information all year-round and the board would have only one chance to give its side."

Emanuel said that although the CUB was defeated, the debate helped stimulate effort to revitalize the People's Counsel, which has been unable to match the financial resources of the utility companies.

"If we can beef up the People's Counsel, this might have done something after all," Emanuel said.

Debate centered primarily on the lobbying efforts of the Maryland Action Coalition (MAC) a consumer group which drafted the proposal.

The Secretary of State is reviewing the coalition's fund raising activities because it raised more than $800,000 last year and spent much of it on salaries. The review is expected to be completed this week.

The coalition also faces a lawsuit from a private fund raising organization which canvassed Montgomery and Prince George's counties for the MAC. The Hudson Bay Company says the coalition failed to pay its fee.

Sen. James Simpson, D-Charles, said the CUB was a tool for consumer activists who would disrupt the workings of the PSC for their own political purposes.

"And it's going to put a lot of money into the hands of a few people," Simpson added. (UPI)

Mikulski to visit China

Rep. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., says she wants first-hand exposure to the culture and the people during her upcoming visit to the Republic of China.

Ms. Mikulski is the only woman and the only freshman among the bipartisan Congressional delegation that will depart for Shanghai and return April 17.

"It's a chance to be a part of an ancient culture. Ever since I read Pearl Buck's 'Good Earth.' I've been interested in learning about the East. The eastern mind looks at the world in a very different way," said Ms. Mikulski.

Mikulski, an outspoken, aggressive politician, said she believes she was selected because the State Department recognizes her as a leader.

Cut defense budget for jobs, says group of House Dems

WASHINGTON — A group of House Democrats, led by Rep. Parren Mitchell, D.- Md., have announced they will try to amend the Congressional Budget Act in a way that would take $13 billion from next year's Pentagon budget and put it into social programs.

At a recent news conference, Mitchell said he would introduce the amendment on the House floor April 25. He criticized James Schlesinger, President Carter's energy administrator and the defense secretary in the Nixon and Ford administrations.

The present escalation of cold war atmosphere really began in full force under Mr. Schlesinger," said Mitchell, adding that proponents of bigger military budgets were trying to "frighten" Americans into believing "that the Soviets are about to land in San Clemente."

Mitchell was joined by several House members, including California Democrats Ron Dellums and John Burton and the coalition for a new foreign policy, representing 35 peace groups around the country.

Mitchell's proposal would, among other things, cancel the B1 Bomber, defer development of the MX mistile, cancel development of the F18 aircraft and place a one-year moratorium on new ship building.

That money, he said, would be transferred to public service employment and job training programs, plus other domestic programs, producing an estimated 650,000 additional jobs.

The Senate Budget Committee voted 17 to 1 earlier this week to fight the high unemployment rate among youths by increasing educational spending to help disadvantaged children by $800 million.

Godwin's 'racist' veto kills King bill

RICHMOND — Sen. L. Douglas Wilder, D-Richmond, this week labeled as a "racist act" Gov. Mills E. Godwin Jr.'s veto of a bill that would have designated Jan. 1 as Martin Luther King Jr. Day in Virginia.

Wilder suggested Monday that Godwin has not progressed far since his days as a segregationist state senator and member of the Byrd political organization that organized massive resistance to desegregation.

Wilder, the senate's only black, said he was disappointed but not surprised by Godwin's decision to kill the King measure that was passed overwhelmingly by the 1977 140-member General Assembly.

Del. William P. Robinson of Norfolk, the only black in the House of Delegates, was equally critical of Godwin for overriding the wishes of the legislature. "The rationale for the veto is specious," said Robinson, running Godwin's reason for the veto.

Godwin's veto of the King bill will serve to further embed him in history as a governor who stuck mostly with segregationist practices aimed principally to keep black people down.

In rejecting the King bill, Godwin — probably unintentionally — dealt a blow to the Republican gubernatorial candidacy of John Dalton by giving the Democrats more ammunition to convince black voters that Republicans are racists.

Both Godwin and Dalton are Republicans.

Nothing the angry reactions of black people to the Godwin veto, former Atty. General Andrew P. Miller moved quickly in an apparent effort to appeal to black voters who could play a crucial role in the outcome of his current battle for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

Miller, in a speech Tuesday night before a black sports group, differed with Godwin, praised King as "a great leader and a great man." supported Wilder's sponsorship of the King bill and vowed that "I shall support legislation to designate a day in Virginia in honor of Martin Luther King."

Miller is running against former Lt. Gov. Henry Howell in the June 14 Democratic primary.

Howell is considered the more liberal of the two candidates — and is usually more prone to speak out on behalf of issues related to civil rights.

However, Miller beat Howell to the punch on the King bill, signalling that Miller isn't writing off the black vote in his quest for the governor's mansion.

Miller's decision to support the King bill was probably calculated to broaden his present big business image and, at the same time, shatter the heavy black support that Howell seemingly enjoys now.

Howell or Miller, which ever wins the primary election, will face the Republican candidate in the November general election. The Republican candidate is expected to be Dalton.

"I think it was a racist act," Wilder told a Capitol news conference. Asked if that meant he thought the governor was a racist, Wilder said:

"I think the governor has emerged from a cocoon over the years which spelled him out to be a racist. And then there was a mellowing period of time and this mellowing was supposed to be occurring during this four year stint.

"I'm saying this crowning of his four year stint would indicate that he hasn't completely erased his previous image," Wilder said.

Godwin vetoed the King bill last week saying the state already has enough legal holidays. He said the action had no racial overtones.

"There would be absolutely no basis for such an implication to be placed upon it" said the governor who has a long record of opposing civil rights. "Dr. King was certainly a great leader and he accomplished much during his lifetime."

Godwin noted that Virginia has no legal holidays for Thomas Jefferson and other distinguished Virginians and that King's native Georgia has not designated a holiday for him.

Wilder pointed out there is one day set aside for two Confederate civil war heroes, Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson.

"I live with Lee-Jackson Day," Wilder said.

He said designating Jan. 1 Martin Luther King Jr. Day would have cost the state nothing and caused no inconvenience because most places of business are closed in honor of New Year's Day.

He said Jan. 1 will be remembered as "The day a Republican said no, you can't honor" Martin Luther King Jr.

Wilder sponsored the King bill and said he would introduce a similar measure next year.

Godwin's term expires shortly after the 1978 session begins.

"Hopefully, next year we will have a Democrat in the governor's office," Wilder said.

Miller made his remarks on the King bill at the Richmond Athletic Scholarship Banquet honoring the ninth anniversary of the slaying of King who was killed by an assassin's bullet in Memphis.

Miller called the murder date "a sad anniversary in the history of our country and said the Nobel peace prize winner's "greatest legacy to us is that he gave us a new perception of our own ideals through his struggle to be free at last."
