New dean of art at VCU: 'We're going to community'

RICHMOND

Dr. Murry N. DePillars the new dean of the Virginia Commonwealth University School of Art in Richmond, plans to run a school that reaches out to the surrounding community.

"Rather than force the community to come to us, we're going to the community," DePillars told the AFRO this week.

Among the ideas he would like to see come about are bringing the elderly to view VCU drama performances and designing graphers course for the general public.

Many of DePillars' works can be classified as "Movement Art" because it screams out at racial injustices and converts into militants black figures who have been cast in subservient roles. One of his most popular works is the one which shows an angry Aunt Jemima, with weapon in hand, rebelling against white racism.

DePillars became VCU's first black dean when the Richmond university's board of visitors appointed him last Friday. He had been the school's acting dean.

The board also named Dr. Charles P. Ruch, acting dean of the School of Education, as that school's permanent dean.

DePillars came to VCU in 1971 as assistant dean for student affairs. He was appointed acting dean of the school of the arts in 1976.

Prior to coming to VCU, DePillars served as assistant director of the Educational Assistance Program for the University of Illinois at Chicago and as master instructor with the Chicago Committee on Urban Opportunity.

A graduate of Roosevelt University where he also received the master of arts degree, DePillars earned the Ph.D. degree at Pennsylvania State University.

His paintings, drawings, sculpture and jewelry have been included in exhibitions throughout the East Coast and are included in the private collections of such well known people as historian Lerone Bennett Jr. poetesses Nikki Giovanni and Gwendolyn Brooks, playwright Melvin Van Peebles and entertainer Nina Simone.

DePillars' works are included in two international art survey books, Contemporary "Black Artists in America" and "Black Artists on Art."

D. Payne College is fighting back

By E. P. Wallace
AFRO Correspondent

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Daniel Payne College, damaged severely during the early April tornado weather that also ripped apart two predominantly black suburban communities near here, will begin its 1977-78 session in August.

Bishop Philip R. Cousin chairman of the AME-affiliated school, has issued the following report on the damage and on immediate future plans:

"The Science Building was nearly destroyed. The Administration Building was severely damaged (roof, windows, the library and equipment). The dormitory roof was damaged and some rooms were rendered useless by water damage. The cafeteria must have a completely new roof."

Underclassmen were permitted to go home and after-offering for the laymen to help defray the expenses of the lay delegates to their biennial convention to be held in Kansas City, Mo. in August.

The Lay Organization will give a report of what they received from the churches at the Christian Education Convocation in Mobile on July 11-14, Bishop Cousin said.

Seven in-service training centers have been established in the Ninth District. Every minister, candidates for the ministry and as many laymen as possible are urged to attend the sessions. They meet every other week and the presiding elders are urged to remind all candidates and those who are to meet classes in the annual conference to be present.

House Scholars chosen at Yale

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Miss Cathleen Campbell and Jesse Young have been selected as Scholars of the House at Yale University — the most prestigious academic honor at the university.

The Scholars of the House program provides an opportunity for highly qualified students to devote their senior years to independent and original projects, whether academic or creative of their own choosing.

The program is a separate major and scholars are not required to complete one of the regular majors at Yale.

In admitting students to tre program, the faculty committee considers evidence of extraordinary proficiency in the candidate's field of special interest, demonstrated capacity for independent work and intellectual self-discipline, the quality and feasibility of the proposed project and the candidate's reasons for judging that the program would further his education more effectively than a standard Yale College major.

Miss Campbell's Scholar project will involve the writing of an original screenplay, "A Nursery Rhyme," as well as the direction of the film.

"I have been appalled by the loathsome depictions of black characters on the screen," she said. "I will attempt a more realistic and sensitive portrayal of black characters in my film."

Miss Campbell plans to spend the summer in France, studying filmmaking at the University of Paris. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Calvin C. Campbell of Chicago.

For his project, Young, who was formerly an American studies major, plans to write a book on "A Century of Blacks at Yale, 1874-1974." The book will explore the backgrounds, experiences and careers of Afro-American graduates of Yale College.

Black colleges needed, says Labor secretary

AUSTIN, Texas — Secretary of Labor Ray Marshall says there are "compelling justifications for largely black colleges today."

In the commencement address at the Houston-Tillotson College recently, Marshall, an expert on the problems of blacks in employment, noted that black colleges were found as a response to segregation.

"Fortunately," he said, much of that need has eroded in the past decade or so. But today there are other compelling justifications for largely black colleges.

"We all know that we have not fully eradicated segregation from our schools, our housing patterns or our social structures," Marshall said.

He added that because of "lingering forms of segregation," many talented black students need a "supportive environment" in which to learn what they can accomplish.

This is a role that black colleges have always played. And this is a role that black colleges need to continue to fill today," Marshall said.

Noting the concern of many graduates about finding jobs, he said; "I wish I could assuage your fears, but the economy is improving, it will be a long while before jobs are again plentiful."

Marshall added: "The important thing to remember is not to lose confidence in yourself and your potential," especially in the wake of the current U.S. unemployment figures.
