South African actors in powerful depiction of prison life

for whites there, to hope that blacks let them "live in our world on earth" when the final racial upheaval occurs.

The group's humor is biting and spares nothing and no one, not even themselves. Yet, and it has to be, it is always tempered by an undercurrent of gripe, which seems to hold the characters together when all else is crumbling.

It's like what Themba said about the nourishment the group gets, knowing the brothers and sisters are fighting in Soweto, even as they perform.

"I think it livens our act, sustains us (and) gives us inspiration," he said, his voice drifting back to his family. "I miss my mother and brother, man." He says this softly, perhaps knowing that the war, his leaving, could have caused them to be swallowed by now.

When the troupe started, he said, "at a risk that you could not run from," the mood in South Africa was toward "integration ... multi racial." And still they formed out of "frustration," Seth reveals.

"Since, the gap has widened," Themba went on, "Blacks and whites (are) hating." This makes "black theatre a commitment to society, and to ourselves. It is reeducational." And he emphasizes that point. "When you're black in South Africa, you're in politics whether you like it or not."

Jim Crow. Apartheid. Different spelling, but the symptoms of both cancers are the same. Excedrins don't help. Only catharsis: yelling, hitting, marching, sitting in Blacks on both sides of the Atlantic found (find) that out daily. Now, of course, more so in Soweto than here.

"Survival" captures, indeed, 'lives' that need for release. It does it in two ways.

Sometimes the actors can instill laughter with their deft police impersonations, or with their cutup prison antics, which still manage to sneak in despite the hard times, beatings and horrible food.

Then, flipping the coin, like collective schizos they give accounts of the desperate, humiliating acts that go through just to work, find a place to sleep, buy a cup of coffee or even go to a South African black must sew two black nations together there.

Luckily, Baltimore's Arena Players hopes to start some needed stitching. It has set up July stage dates for "Survival."

"I am just thrilled," Clifton Sherr and, [illegible] director for the local theater, told the AFRO. "The tentative dates are July 14, 15 and 16 and the weekend following those dates."

Sherrard says he, too, feels black people need to see "Survival." He perhaps, senses what those who've survived, to give us "Survival," know: "The outside is the brutality that gets them inside ...

Prison, of course. Robben Island/Alcatraz ... the similarities. "Survival" proves, don't end with the word island.

Particularly gut-wrenching is the scene where Seth's mother must sell her body to a white state worker — just to secure her son a working pass.

Similarly, the realization of the prisoner who is freed, yet must come back to prison for 'freedom' (where at least he can 'eat' and 'sleep'), illuminates just how vicious an "Apar-crow" system is.

It is urgent that Afro Americans see, feel, touch "Survival." Orange County has. But the thread cannot the john.

McDonald's observes third anniversary

A continental breakfast and auction was recently held for employees of Broadway-Payne Inc. as part of their three year anniversary celebration.

The corporation is largely comprised of 150 employes many of whom are student at local schools, at two store operations one at 2201-25 N. Broadway and the other at 11-23 W. North Avenue.

Some of the winners were: Luvenia Bryant (a ladies bicycle), Sharon Richards (a gold and diamond watch), Cassandra Oliver (a cassette recorder/player), Randy Harris (a gold and diamond watch) and Ronnie White (a digital clock radio).

The auction is the culminating activity of a McBuck incentive program. In this program, employes are rewarded with McBuck's (play money) for certain feats accomplished according to McDonal's high quality standards.

Osburne Payne, president of the Corporation, says he feels this incentive program to be such a big success that two other auctions are being planned for the employes.

Immediately following the breakfast and auction, there was a service recognition ceremony and cake cutting.

Service awards were presented to the following crew persons: (one-year awards) Allen Bland, Samuel Barnes, Sandra Gordon, Lois Johnson, Janice Pittman, Jarious Poindexter, April Powers and Reginald Stewart.

Wendalyn McKinney, Karen Oliver, Ronnie White, Carolyn Palmer and Valeria McKinney received two-year awards.

Johnathan Scott received a three-year award.

This was followed by cocktails and a buffet brunch at the Sheraton Motor Lodge. Managers were honored with bonuses and service awards. Service awards were presented to the following: (one-year awards) May Gardner Bey, Vanessa Davis, Fran Harris, Patricia Smith, Johnny Sanders and Warren Lewis. Two-year award winners were Avon Jenkins, Stanley Harmon and Walter Bland.

Three year award winners were Mattie Teel, Vickie Oliver, Tammy Fowlkes, J.C. Gallimore and Altus Williams.

The Black executive.

Is he a token of the private sector? Simply a "spook who sat by the door?" Someone the Black community is privileged to put down, if he represents more than just a self-serving, soft touch for private interests?

Or, is the Black executive a strong and necessary symbol of upward mobility today? A positive image for youth to emulate?

I think it all depends on how honestly you look at the man. How realistically you evaluate the dues he, and every man who makes the executive level, pays to get there.

Business and Industry have promoted many Black men to executive positions. And many of these gentlemen are corporate officers in decision-making positions.

These are men who have chosen to use their minds. Their education and training. And their innate qualities to relate to, and implement the intricate programs of business. Businesses which, incidentally, often help support Black Americans in our battle to end the feelings of hopelessness and helplessness.

The Black executive must be able to take an overview of the problems, proposals and programs he is presented with. And make proper decisions, pro or con, with an eye to the long range and most rewarding effects.

For everyone involved.

It isn't easy to say no. It isn't easy to say yes. Because decision making isn't easy. But it is part of the job for every executive, Black or white.

Black executives are not where they are just to sit and be seen ... in addition to their other responsibilities, the fact is that they often guide their company's allocations to special programs which benefit the Black community.

They have earned and deserve our respect.
