She put in 60-to-80-hour weeks, and had signed up for her second year's residency there, they said.
"She made us laugh," said a nurse. "She was caring. When the nurses were busy, she'd sit down at the (nursing) station and take off her own orders instead of having us do it. She'd help us give baths and make beds."
When the nurse herself was a patient and feared she had cancer, Phyllis stayed all night in the room with her, talking to her and cheering her up: "I said I felt like jumping off the heliport, but she said she'd be right there to catch me . . . She told me she loved me. She gave me a back rub."
Her patients knew her as "an automatic smile machine." a fellow doctor said. Doctors have to do "exit rounds" with patients, he noted but "she used to say . . . 'I do smile rounds. It's such a drag to see patients looking awful.'
"So she'd go in and say to a patient, Hey come on man, I want to see a smile.' Her patients was such that they'd come back to her and say, "See, Dr. Birckhead. I'm smiling." And she'd say, Now I want to see you walk.'"
Another recalled she never made a point of telling friends she was a doctor and if asked would say, "Oh, I tend to the sick and afflicted" — and some thought her a nurse.
He said she was given a black engraved doctor's bag at graduation but threw it in a closet. "It was too pretentious for her. She carried all her implements, her stethoscope, in a striped knapsack."
But she had a taste for fine clothes and class: When she threw a New Year's party, she required her usually blue-jeaned guests to wear tuxedos "She'd decided that to live life without style wasn't worth it," said a friend. Her style "put a spark in the day."
"She liked cameras and she loved the sun and butterflies and mushrooms and flowers," another said. "Being out of doors. And being a lady. She was spunky and aggressive."
When all that ended for her, classmates at Howard led by Dr. Katherine Cantwell established the Dr. Phyllis Ann Birckhead Revolving Loan Fund there for medical students in May a year ago. Phyllis had always said students even after making it to college often had need for emergency funds, her parents recalled.
"The great thing is 17 kids got to use it last school year," said Mrs. Birckhead, a home economics teacher at Nottoway Senior High School. The aid is a $500 loan.
This May, Birckhead, deputy chief of services at Fort Pickett, and Mrs. Birckhead went up to alumni day at Howard with the latest report: The fund has reached $6,250.
He is a Hampton Institute graduate, and Mrs. Birckhead a Virginia State alumna, but they have pledged themselves to give $500 a year to the Howard fund until the goal is reached, he said.
In July last year, "Friends of the University of Denver" established the Dr. Phyllis Ann Birckhead Scholarship there to help send to attend black medical students there, her parents said.
Then early this spring Nancy L. Bannister of her high school class announced from West St. Paul, Minn., that Amelia class of '67 has opened a special account at Fidelity National Bank in Amelia so that classmates and friends can contribute to the loan fund at Howard.
They want to contribute "to make it possible for some other black student to complete his/her medical training as Phyllis did." Miss Bannister wrote the AFRO.

SCHOLARSHIPS HONOR HER

Dr. Birckhead died at age 27 but memories of her live on

By Hamilton Crockford
AFRO Staff Writer
AMELIA COUNTY, VA.

Dr. Phyllis Ann Birckhead loved life and since they can't give it back to her, her friends across the U.S. are trying to make life richer for others in a way they know she would have liked.

The young woman from Amelia County, Va. was an intern full of spirit and promise and reputedly the only black female physician in the state of Colorado when she met death in a traffic accident on a spring day in Denver in 1976, less than a year after she received her M.D. degree at Howard University College of Medicine.

But Phyllis Birckhead, dead at 27 after a school bus and her bicycle collided as she rode during her lunch break at the hospital. May 5 last year, will not be just a traffic statistic.

Today there are scholarships in her name at two universities more than half the continent apart. And her high school classmates are mounting a drive to swell the fund at one of them.

There had to be reasons that statistics and biographical sketches don't offer to explain this kind of impact, although the record was impressive itself.

Born in Salisbury, Md. and growing up in Amelia County where her parents moved early in her life, Phyllis Birckhead, only child of Mr. and Mrs. William T. Birckhead Jr., (now of Blackstone), was salutatorian of her 1967 graduating class at Amelia's Russell Grove High School.

Liking Denver when she saw it on a family visit to California when she was in the 10th grade, she started a correspondence with the University of Denver that kept right on and she enrolled there because she "wanted to see
