A NEW ECONOMIC EDUCATION CENTER for Baltimoreans will be established at Morgan State University (MSU). The Morris Goldseker Foundation gave a $45,000 grant to the school. Participating in the ceremony were (L to R) Simon G. Goldseker; Sheldon Goldseker; Dr. Andrew Billingsley, president of MSU; Frank E. Farnan, president of the Council on Economic Education in Maryland and Dr. Daniel L. Spencer, Morgan professor and acting chairman of the school's economics department.

MSU plans economics education center

Dr. Andrew Billingsley, president of Morgan State University, announced that Morgan is developing plans to establish a Center for Economic Education.

The announcement was made jointly by Dr. Billingsley and the Council on Economic Education in Maryland (CEEM). Mr. Frank E. Farnan, CEEM president, represented the council.

The new center, which will be dedicated to helping Baltimoreans increase their understanding of the economy, is being made possible by a two-year grant of $15,000 from the Morris Goldseker Foundation of Maryland Inc.

Two trustees of the Goldseker Foundation, Simon Goldseker and Sheldon Goldseker, presented Dr. Billingsley with the check.

Dr. Danile L. Spencer, acting chairman, Department of Economics at Morgan, participated in the ceremony. Dr. Spencer and Dr. Broadus E. Sawyer, dean of the School of Business at Morgan, will have major roles in the development of the Economics Education Center.

CEEM is a non-profit organization of educators and leaders from business, labor, government and agriculture who are dedicated to helping the state's quantity and quality of their economic understanding.

CEEM was established in 1953 and is funded jointly by the state government and donations from private corporations and individual donors. The Maryland council is one of 48 similar councils operated throughout the U.S. with the same objective. All are affiliated with the national Joint Council on Economic Education.

Dr. Billingsley said he believes CEEM made the right choice in selecting Morgan to develop the center.

"Our school of business and management has earned an outstanding reputation in Maryland and other parts of the country. I am sure CEEM had this in mind when they came to us with this particular program. We are more than glad to participate," he said.

Dr. Billingsley also announced that Mrs. Dorothy Mattison will serve as interim director of the new economic center.

Mr. Farnan, CEEM president, said during the announcement ceremonies, "On the surface 'economic education' may sound like a very dull topic but," he said, "inflation and the rising cost of living have made many people realize they must increase their knowledge of our American economy and how it works."

"The grant by the Morris Goldseker Foundation," Mr. Farnan continued, "and the support of Morgan State University will permit us to increase economic educational programs for people throughout the Baltimore metropolitan area."

The new center will be the fourth such facility in Maryland. Other centers are functioning at Towson State University, Loyola College in Columbia and at Mount St. Mary's College in Emmitsburg.

The Morris Goldseker Foundation is a private grant-making foundation with the aim of improving the quality of life for Baltimore citizens. The foundation was established by Morris Goldseker, who died in 1973 and left the bulk of his estate for philanthropy in the Baltimore metropolitan area.

The Council on Economic Education in Maryland is led by a 33-member elected Board of Trustees. Mr. Robert Highsmith is full-time executive director and the organization's offices are located on the campus of Towson State University.

City, counties get law enforcement grants

Grant awards to Baltimore County, Baltimore City and Harford County were among $1.4 million in grants awarded by the Governor's Commission on Law Enforcement and the Administration of Justice.

Baltimore City received a grant award of $36,576 for a project to provide medical and psychological treatment to adult alcoholics at the Baltimore City Hospital who have been referred to the project by the Baltimore City Alcoholism Unit of the Division of Parole and Probation.

"Individuals referred will be those with a history of alcohol abuse who have committed two or more criminal offenses, one of which is of a violent nature. Program participants will be required to report regularly for antabuse medication, group counseling, and if needed, vocational counseling.

For each week of successful treatment, the probationer's period of court ordered treatment will be reduced one week until the minimum treatment period of one year is reached. When the client successfully completes the program, project personnel will request that the probation officer send a letter to the sentencing judge requesting early termination of probation.

Another grant award to Baltimore City in the amount of $19,417 will provide funding for development of a law and justice curriculum for selected eleventh grade students at Lake Clifton High School.

An additional component of the grant will be a staff development workshop for secondary school teachers on teaching law-related education in the social studies curriculum.

This program will be carried out in conjunction with a grant awarded to the State Department of Education in the amount of $95,000. The program is designed to increase student awareness of and appreciation for the fundamentals of law and constitutional rights.

During its second year of operation, this program provided training for 300 teachers.

A $30,000 grant award to Baltimore City will provide continuing support of the Baltimore City Police Department's Crime Resistance Unit.

Post office proposes rate hike

If planned postal rate hikes go into effect next year, as proposed by Post Office officials, the average citizen may still feel some pain, even though no change in his rate is planned.

It is thought that insurance companies and utilities will suffer most from the mailing cost hike to 18 cents, because of their monthly, sometimes weekly, billing procedures.

But, in Baltimore, where B. G. E. just announced a rate increase, and where the state-run insurance fund has proposed another premium hike, who is to say citizens won't be asked (ordered) to bear any new mailing costs?

* * *

Meanwhile, a spokesperson for a major Baltimore insurance company says his company has begun sending its bulk mail in nylon bags instead of heavier canvas ones.

Yet with all due respect to oil companies' track records, it's hard to believe that companies will simply "raise the price on the postage meters and just have another expense," as the spokesperson put it.

So, if history is any measure, when and if the postal rates go up for businesses, it would be a safe investment for us to buy a few more stamps. We'll probably end up paying for their 18 cents stamps one way or another.

African ties in mask classes

The Baltimore Museum of Art has attempted to be true to tradition in its current summer offering: African Masks and Legends.

Presented in classes for youths aged five to seven and eight to 14, the program seeks to instill in its students a necessary respect for the totality of African arts, concentrating on dance, music, masks and ceremonial costuming.

The children use authentic African and oceanic peoples' masks and other works of art in the museum's Alan and Janet Wurtzburger collection as inspiration to create their own masks.

Their facial and bodily (they also make full length masks) creations must fall into four specific sensory categories: Play, Mourning, Fear and the Unknown.

"The children each have an idea with which they are working," explained Marjorie Anderson, an instructor for the older aged group. "Their costumes and masks must get that idea across."

The masks are made from cardboard and paper mache, with everybody gleefully sloshing their way through tubs of icky whitish glue which holds everything together.

Each class session, the children are taught the meanings and connections of African Masks and ceremonial costuming with dance, through the instruction of John Taylor a co-director of the Cultural Arts Group, a dance troupe at Dunbar High.

Too, during the visits to the Wurtzburger collection, the children hear the stories and legends behind certain masks. They then attempt to create masks and customes guided by the information they learn.

Each of its four, week-long, session ends with a mini-festival, where each student wears his or her body maks and African outfit, and dances before an audience usually consisting of parents and friends.
