Personalities: The way they see it for '78

As the year of 1977 closes with unemployment sky high, social security benefits diminishing, the right to abortion not open to all, politicians in which we had faith being jailed, what do we have to look for in 1978?

For most black folks there is still a dim view. One of the worst winters ever has been promised to us and many of us stand the chance of being evicted or being without food and heat.

The AFRO talked this week with personalities in various fields and here are their outlooks for 1978.

RAFEAL CORTADA, president of the Community College of Baltimore says:

"The scarcity of money will be the key issue in 1978 for education. It's necessary to make sure politicians know that education is an investment in people rather than an expenditure. The competition will be fierce among post - secondary level schools trying to get financial assistance in 1978."

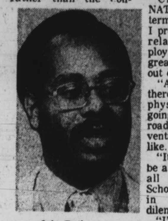
Another educator, John Bethea, president of the United Teachers of Baltimore City sees no change in education situations.

"I don't see too many significant changes in class sizes, supplies or teachers. I'd like to see more teachers hired in '78 to fill the many vacancies rather than the continuance of using long term substitutes. This would help the present job market."



John Bethea

DR. LESLIE KING HAMMOND, dean of graduate students, The Maryland Institute of Art feels black folks need to emphasize the importance of reading and math in 1978.

"Blacks must address themselves to this problem more directly since we suffer most. The family is going to have to play a stronger role in the education of their children. Discipline must come from the home. It is becoming increasingly hard for teachers to teach and handle discipline problems too."

Nathan Irby

City Councilman, NATHAN IRBY says, "In terms of city government, I predict a sad year. In relation to unemployment, I see even a greater number of people out of work.

"As far as the city goes, there will be a lot of physical construction going on in terms of roads, aquariums, convention centers and the like.

"It's basically going to be a tight fiscal year for all major problems. Schools will especially be in a bad financial dilemma.

"I'm not too optimistic, but I am concerned about housing and energy as it relates to poor people.

"The City Council as a body are afraid to approach the real problems of the city. There are a lot of things we could be doing in terms of legislature."

Dr. Leslie K. Hammond

DEL. JOHN DOUGLASS predicts a further decline in the economic system in the state during 1978.

"Unemployment is still on the rise. We also have to be careful in our choice for governor. Whoever we select will have to be sympathetic to the needs of blacks.

"In terms of issues, I

see the medicaid payments for abortions and the cost of living being debated long and hard. Property assessments to the middle class will also be an important issue as will capital punishment.

FRANK CONAWAY, Director of Ashburton Insurance Ltd. commented: "I am very optimistic about the economic outlook for Baltimore for 1978. I anticipate more jobs which will bring more money into the economy. I also anticipate an injection of more federal money to provide jobs, especially for young people. I think the subway should provide jobs for minority contractors."

LARRY DEAN, News Director, WEAA - FM said: "We blacks have major problems such as unemployment that I'm concerned about. My major complaint or rather, what I'd like to see is a major comprehensive employment program that would guarantee unemployed blacks first crack at any new jobs that are made available either in private industry or the government.

JAN MITCHELL, announcer, WEAA says: "The first thing I'm concerned with is more monies for black people, more housing. Also, we all need to drop a line to Pat over at HEW, so they'll start getting on their toes. We definitely need more jobs because it's been an established fact that white women are getting the jobs that we blacks should have. It's basically time for some long overdue changes.

TRAVIS WINKEY, director of the Travis Winkey Modeling Studio: "In terms of the look, fashions will be about 'doing your own thing.' A person will be wearing what's right'for them, as opposed to following the trend.

You see, all styles are important and people will create styles for themselves — men and women both. It's no longer important to spend $70 - $80 on a dress.

Agnew's appeal denied

ANNAPOLIS — The state Court of Appeals has refused to hear former Vice President Spiro T. Agnew's appeal of a lawsuit filed by three taxpayers seeking to recover $87,000 in kickbacks Agnew allegedly took while governor.

The court announced Wednesday it has upheld a ruling by Anne Arundel County Circuit Judge Bruce C. Williams who said the three taxpayers had a right to represent all state taxpayers in the lawsuit because "such a scheme (the alleged kickbacks) reasonably may lead to higher taxes for the taxpayers of Maryland.

A report released by the U.S. Attorney for Maryland at the time of Agnew's resignation as Vice President in 1973 included evidence that he received more than $87,000 in kickbacks from architectural and engineering firms while governor.

The higher court refused to hear Agnew's appeal because it was not made in compliance with state judicial procedures.

Agnew will face civil proceedings in Anne Arundel County Circuit Court unless the court rescinds the order.

Agnew must file a request by Jan. 11 to have the court reconsider its decision and rescind the ruling.

Also named in the lawsuit are I. H. "Bud" Hammerman, a real estate investment broker and Agnew confidante, and Jerome B. Wolff, former director of the Maryland Roads Commission.

Agnew and his associates tried to block the case in Circuit Court charging the lawsuit did not include sufficient facts to proceed with the case.

But Williams rejected their arguments in August and ruled that a recent state law has "displayed a notably liberal trend" in permitting taxpayer suits.

Agnew resigned as Vice President in October 1973 after pleading no contest in U. S. District Court in Baltimore to a charge of failing to pay $13,541 in federal income taxes.

Ships take Christmas presents to Liberia

Two freighters that left Baltimore early this month laden with books, medical supplies and vegetable seeds arrived in Liberia's capital of Monrovia in time to unload their gifts for Christmas.

The Yuletide shipment — worth $500,000 — was sent to the West African nation by school districts in Baltimore, Cleveland, Columbus, Boston, St. Louis and Philadelphia, The Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. and others.

Robert A. Ringson, director of the Brother's Brother Foundation, the organizers of the project, said the shipment was "the greatest sea lift of books ever to go to Africa."

The 200,000 textbooks covered subjects ranging from mathematics to skilled trades to social sciences and medicine.

The foundation, a Pittsburgh-based volunteer organization affiliated with the Baptist Church, solicited donations to be distributed through Liberian President William R. Tolbert Jr.

The cargo, which was shipped free on two Firestone freighters, included 345 tons of desks, chairs and light fixtures, enough polio and measles vaccine to inoculate 200,000 children, dental equipment, paint and several tons of vegetable seeds donated by the Burpee Seed Co. of Philadelphia.

Ringson wrote Tolbert that the cargo "comes to you as a birthday and Christmas present . . . for the uplift of an historic and worthy nation of friends in Liberia."

Ringson said his foundation will send a team of doctors to Liberia in February to administer the inoculations to avert anticipated measles and polio outbreaks in the country this winter.

Port official resigns

A Maryland Port Administration official has submitted his resignation apparently because of personnel changes made when the state police took over law enforcement duties at the waterfront.

Martin C. Pilsch Jr., director of terminal operations for the MPA submitted his resignation Dec. 16, but it has not been accepted, according to Herman K. Integman, state transportation secretary.

Among Pilsch's duties is the supervision of security and safety at the port.

Reports Tuesday said that Pilsch resigned after a disagreement with acting port administrator Gregory Halpin.

Legislation would cut school aid

Proposed legislation by the Carter Administration, which could cut millions of dollars in impact aid to Maryland schools, has angered the state's congressional and educational leaders who vow to fight the proposal.

The bill would eliminate aid provided to school districts that educate children of government workers or with federally supported housing.

Rep. Newton Steers, a Republican representing Montgomery County and its large population of federal employees, said Tuesday the proposal is "drastic."
