Juvenile crime rises in Anne Arundel County

ANNAPOLIS (UPI) — Juvenile crime increased markedly in one major Maryland county since 1974 and was nearly stable in three others, despite fears of state officials who anticipated increases in all four areas.

The Juvenile Services Administration said juvenile crime rose 51.5 percent in Anne Arundel County, but was relatively unchanged in Montgomery, Prince George's and Baltimore counties.

The administration released a report on the four major county population centers that was compiled since 1974 when a state law was passed to prohibit institutionalization of status offenders, or children who are runaways or ungovernable and in need of supervision.

Administration Director Rex Smith and officials earlier had feared it would generate a "large increase in delinquency."

The report was compiled to illustrate "trends" in suburban delinquency and status offenses." The four counties surveyed include 53 percent of the state's juvenile population.

"There was great concern around the state about how to handle the hundreds of youths who had -previously been referred to juvenile services as status offenders, but who could no longer be placed in training schools," said Smith.

"We are pleased to see this prediction is not being borne out. It shows that communities are designing delinquency prevention programs and dealing effectively with these youngsters outside of the juvenile justice system," he said.

Capt. William S. Lindsey, spokesman for Anne Arundel County Police, said law enforcement officials recognize there is a juvenile delinquency problem in the county, particularly in narcotics violations.

"Our figures indicated that there has been an increase in arrests," he said. "We know there is a juvenile crime problem — not as large as they have said in the report — but we are doing something about it."

Lindsey said the 51.5 percent rise in juvenile crime could be due partly to increased effectiveness in arresting juvenile offenders.

In Baltimore County, juvenile offenses decreased 4.2 percent — from 4,498 in 1974 to 4,308 in 1977, according to the report.

In Montgomery County, 2,556 juveniles were charged with crimes in 1974, while 2,506 were charged in 1977 — a 2 percent drop.

There were 7,253 juvenile offenses in Prince George's County in 1974, one more than in 1977.

Billingsley outlines MSU plans to Faculty Institute

The president of Morgan State University said Thursday that the entire basic studies program at Morgan will be reorganized and given a higher priority within the academic structure.

In addressing a Faculty Institute held on the campus, which addressed itself to improving the teaching and learning of skills, Dr. Andrew Billingsley, the president, said the university is now proposal to fund the program.

He also gave strong support to the establishment of a university policy which would require mandatory class attendance for freshmen and sophomores and perhaps all students who are not doing exceedingly well in their classes.

"Our commitment to excellence and our responsibility to the education of all our students," he said, "will be enhanced immeasurably if they are undergirded by such a class attendance policy."

Billingsley told the group he is supporting the development of a procedure for systematically evaluating faculty and their class attendance, preparedness for class lectures and overall effectiveness. He pointed out "we do ourselves a disservice if we allow ourselves to begin another year without such a policy."

He went on to say that the constant improvement in the quality of teaching and learning at Morgan State is the "premiere challenge" of the university.

Another challenge, he added is to strengthen the traditional liberal arts program of the university, while adding graduate, professional and research programs which will impact more directly upon the quality of urban life.

"This question (the meaning of an urban oriented university) must continue to receive our best, most creative imagination even as we struggle with particular aspects of new programs, new budgetary supports and new staff patterns," he said.

Billingsley said that the university expects to receive approval from the State Board for Higher Education and approximations from the State legislature for a university-wide research institute; a doctoral program in educational leadership; graduate programs in sociology, geriatric social work, public administration, and economics; a religious studies program, and a M.A. degree program in music and graduate programs in architecture, city planning and urban design.

Morgan's challenge, according to the president, is also to interpret its works, mission, accomplishments and problems in such a way that the larger society will understand and support our endeavors.

Dixon knocks city government

The lack of response by the principal officers of the city government to a resolution passed by the House of Delegates mandating that the Jones Falls section of Interstate Route 83 be renamed for the late Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. is an affront according to a West Baltimore delegate.

The resolution, according to Isaiah Dixon, D. 38, was first read and introduced in the House by a cross-section of black and white delegates from the city's House delegation in February, 1974.

Since its introduction, the resolution received the approval of the majority of the House. Copies were then sent to Mayor William Donald Schaefer, City Council President Walter S. Orlinsky and Comptroller Hyman A. Pressman.

Though the resolution carries no real legislative weight, said Dixon, it was intended to be a courtesy gesture to express to Baltimore officials how strongly House members felt about the manner in which Dr. King's outstanding contributions to the country and the world should be recognized by governments. Dixon admits city officials were not legally bound, however said, "since we have heard nothing from Mayor Schaefer, Mr. Orlinsky and M
