ENGINEERS (Communications)

A role in developing the new "SINCGARS" VHF– that's the kind of challenge you'll find at ITT Aerospace/Optical.

There's a lot going on at ITT Aerospace/Optical Division in Fort Wayne, Indiana, to quicken the pulse of an ambitious communications engineer. Our new contract to develop the U.S. Army's new generation battlefield tactical VHF radio is a case in point.

SINCGARS (Single Channel Ground/Airborne Radio System) is a secure radio that will use the latest frequency-hopping anti-jamming techniques. Like our other radio communications and air traffic control programs, it extends the state-of-the-art and translates it into new and widely diverse fields of application.

If you thrive on challenges of a high order, and are looking for a position that offers wide opportunity for rapid and sustained professional growth, we look forward to reviewing your qualifications for immediate openings in the following areas:

- RF System Analysis and Design
- Portable Transceiver Design and Applications
- Digital and Spread Spectrum Communications Systems
- Modulation Techniques (FM, FSK, PSK)
- Frequency Synthesizers
- COMSEC and Tempest Design
- Mechanical/Thermal Packaging
- Microwave Automatic Test Equipment Design
- RF Power Amplifier Design
- Miniaturized Power Supply Design
- Conversion of Circuit Designs into LSI Form

We're located in Fort Wayne — a city that offers fine cultural, educational and recreational attractions, non-stressful family living, and an enviable cost-of-living.

Smith, a student at Morgan sponsored by Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Inc. and Tanya Shari Cooper, an Edmondson student sponsored by Sigma Gamma Rho Sorority, Inc.

Bishop Edward C. Carroll, president, College of Bishops Northeast Jurisdiction United Methodist Church, as the guest speaker for the evening said, "We should renovate people not just buildings."

Dr. Quincy D. Cooper, Director, Morgan Christian Center said in his remarks, "The Christian Center seeks to coordinate, influence and encourage the activities of all individuals or groups seeking to make Christians convictions effective in their personal and social relations."

Other program participatns for the affair were Dr. Howard L. Cornish, Mrs. Amy. Billingsley, Dr. G. James Fleming, Mrs. H. Jewel Marsan, Miss Margaret C. Lindsay, Dr. Andrew Billingsley, Father Henry J. Offer, the Rev. John W. Coleman, the Rev. William T. Peters and. Bishop Monroe Saunders.

United Nations declares for an independent Namibia

UNITED NATIONS (UPI) — The U.N. General Assembly has adopted a strong declaration calling for South Africa's withdrawal from South West Africa and the creation of an independent staff of Namibia.

But the real action determining Namibia's political future remained outside the 149-member assembly.

Leaders of the South West Africa People's Organization, (SWAPO) which controls black guerilla forces in the area, were due in New York to clear up some of the major points of the plan, submitted to the U.N. Security Council by Britain, Canada, France, West Germany and the United States.

They were expected to meet with representatives of the five Western powers at the U.S. Mission to the United Nations.

The president of SWAPO, Sam Nujoma, expressed misgivings about some aspects of the plan in the general assembly last week and remained in New York for further negotiations.

South Africa has accepted the plan as a package and its Foreign Minister Roelof "Pik" Botha indicated in a memorandum to U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim he could not make any further concessions.

The assembly adopted by a vote of 119-0, with 21 abstentions, a lengthy document containing the declaration and the action program after a drawn-out and repetitious debate which lost its punch after South Africa agreed to the western plan April 25.

The declaration condemns South Africa once more for remaining in the territory after cancellation of its mandate by the United Nations 12 years ago, requests its withdrawal and the creation of an independent Namibia under U.N. supervision and control.

The action program asks for comprehensive economic sanctions against South Africa and other restrictive measures. Many Western countries could not go along with its demands and abstained.

South Africa just has not been listening

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — "Jimmy Kruger, the police minister, came to see me in my prison cell and asked what I'd do if I let me out the next day," said Mr. Mthato Motlana, one of apartheid's fiercest critics.

"I told him that, since I didn't know why he'd detained me in the first place, I would carry on just as before," Motlana said.

Motlana has practiced as a doctor in the black township of Soweto for 30 years. He has been in political detention twice, the second time for 86 days, without trial, without being given a reason. He was released in March.

The probable cause for his most recent term was the powerful oratory that rallied about 80 percent of Soweto's 1.2 million blacks behind the township's "Committee of 10", which he chairs.

Motlana was never given the chance to test his committee's popular support. Each time last year he called a public meeting in Soweto to discuss his committee's plans for the suburb's political future Johannesburg authorities banned it.

But there's no doubt about its widespread backing.

The "Committee of 10's, six members are still in detention, rejects government — sponsored community councils for the country's black townships and wants Soweto to have the right to decide its own destiny.

At one rally in Soweto's Regina Mundi Church last year about 5,000 wildly cheering blacks rose to their feet when he said: "In the history of every country there is a moment of truth and that moment of truth is now and it is black power."

Soon afterwards, on Oct. 19, in a nationwide government swoop aimed at silencing vocal black opposition, Motlana and about 50 other "black consciousness" leaders were detained.

Among them was Percy Qoboza, editor of the black newspaper The World, which was closed down together with 18 black organizations. Qoboza has since been released.

Motlana's beard seems a bit grayer since he entered Modder Bee Prison, 20 miles east of Johannesburg. He is slight and lean but cheerful and irreverent in an interview.

"I know the words Carter and Young are swear words to some people here," he said, referring to the American president and his U.N. Ambassador, Andrew Young, who repeatedly urged Pretoria to shift towards majority rule.

"But I think they're South Africa's best friends. Their advice can still bring peaceful change. If they're ignored, there are people who may ready to create change violently.

"I give this country five to 10 years before there may be any really violent upheavals. Unless the government listens to us and them," he added.

The consulting room in his home in Soweto's Dube suburb, where the black elite live is lined with medical textbooks and novels, among them Alex Haley's "Roots." A well - used exercise bicycle vies for space with the desk and his black leather chair.

An open door off an adjoining examination room looks into a spotlessly clean two - car garage with no cars but two lawnmowers.

Since the nationwide black antigovernment riots raged through South Africa's segregated townships during June 1976, the government has made some changes in its apartheid policies. The most recent gives blacks the right to occupy their own homes in urban areas in perpetuity, though they cannot get full title to them.

Motlana impatiently brushed aside the concessions. "I shall not believe the government is serious about making changes until the pass laws are removed. Now that will be a genuine thing, a wholehearted gesture.

"It'll create so much good will among blacks that there won't be any trouble for 10 years," he said.

The pass laws require all blacks in urban areas to carry identity documents and comply with a bewildering range of regulations governing their jobs, homes, schooling. Failure to have his "pass" in order may result in a black being evicted from his home.

"What good is having freehold occupation of one's house if in terms of the pass laws I may be deported to the Transkei (independent Xhosa tribal homeland) at any moment?" he asked.

But since the detention of Motlana and other black leaders, the unrest and violence has noticeably fallen off.

Why?

"At one point I believed Jimmy's (police minister Kruger) detention had their desired effect, that by locking up the leaders there was no one left to guide black aspirations.

"But now I believe that perhaps there's a period of reflection among the youth. Now let's see what will happen.
