—City budget

In dealing with the tightest city budget in recent history, the board had to cut $28 million from salary appropriations then said there must be $28 million in "salary savings" next fiscal year.

This $28 million is the equivalent of about 1,300 jobs.

But fiscal officials are not talking about mass layoffs. They say they are hoping these jobs will be vacated not by layoffs but by normal attrition.

"There probably will have to be some layoffs," said budget chief George Piendak. "I don't know where, I don't know how many. I really can't speculate with any degree of precision."

The reason Piendak will not speculate is because the budget will now go to the City Council for consideration and he has no idea what they plan to do.

Police and fire department officials declared they could live with their budgets and assured the board layoffs would not be necessary.

But Department of Education officials claimed they could not live with the money given to them.

Mark Joseph, school board president said management skills alone will not be enough to keep the school system within the $288.3 budget given to them, though the figure is about $8 million more than the finance department recommended.

The school system had asked for $315.6 million.

"I expect there may be some layoffs," he said. "We can keep economizing for so long, making improvements but at some point it's positive sort and it becomes a reduction in service."

Piendark said there are few vacant jobs left to abolish this year and there is little in the budget that can be cut by the City Council to decrease the tax rate.

—Jail suit

Both judges gave attorneys and prison officials 30 days to develop a plan to eliminate double-celling and reduce the number of prisoners in each prison.

Neither judge set a limit to the number of prisoners to be housed at the institutions.

The century old Maryland House of Corrections in Jessup is designed to house 1,110 inmates, Harvey said. However, on March 10, its population was 1,708.

"The unconstitutional conditions at the Maryland House of Corrections . . . are caused solely by the defendant's practice of double-celling inmates in the main housing area of the institution," Harvey said.

When double-celling is discontinued and the special confinement units closed, Harvey said the court would be "satisfied that the unconstitutional overcrowding will be eliminated and that other deficiencies described by witnesses in this case will no longer be of constitutional magnitude."

The prisoners also complained of excessive noise, filth, lack of education programs and a high crime rate.

Harvey conceded that the state prison system had made "measurable progress" in physical improvements until "suddenly, in the early and mid-1970s, the prison population in Maryland jumped dramatically."

At that time, Harvey said prison officials ordered "the doubling up of inmates at the institution in single cells containing only 40 square feet."

The 4th Circuit Court of Appeals has ruled in several other cases that double-celling itself is not unconstitutional. But those decisions involved cells of 65 square feet.

Double celling of the 1,500 inmates at the penitentiary began in the 1970s. The cells there measure 44 square feet.

"When the inmate of the upper bunk is required to use the toilet facilities in the middle of the night, his cell mate lies in his bed 18 inches away," Harvey said.

He added that "minimum space to call one's own is a primary psychological necessity."

Both Blair and Harvey said double-celling increased the risk of sexual attacks on prisoners and prevented them from engaging in available education, vocational or recreational programs.

They also said the overcrowding created excessive noise and provided less security for inmates. The judges said if a disturbance broke out, the cells are too small to allow more than one guard to enter at a time.

Now she's Court Commissioner Cooper

Mrs. Sylvia B. Cooper, for eight years a clerk of the District Court, was sworn in Wednesday as Court Commissioner.

Mrs. Cooper is the daughter of Mrs. Lucy Bumbry Thomas and Henry Thomas and member of the noted Bumbry family of King George's County, Virginia.

Her sister is Mrs. Rachel Eaton and cousins the Orioles' Al Bumbry, opera singer, Grace Bumbry, now the toast of Europe; actor Richard Bumbry Pryor and the Red Rooster's well known "Hill Billy," her brother.

New District Court Commissioner Cooper was sworn in by Robert Bouse, the clerk of Superior Court.

As a Court Commissioner, she will issue arrest warrants, criminal summons and give bail hearings.

Among those present at the ceremonies in a downtown courtoom was her daughter Sheryl.

Commissioner Cooper will be training a short time under Administrative Judge Edward Bergending and then assigned to sit in one of the district courts.

Louise Gore may run for governor

Louise Gore, the Republican candidate who lost the 1974 governor's race to suspended Gov. Marvin Mandel, is considering making another bid for the office.

Miss Gore lost in a landslide Mandel victory, receiving only 38 percent of the vote.

While attending the state Republican convention, Miss Gore said she regrets that she did not make more of an issue of political corruption in the 1974 campaign.

"At tye time, there was a grand jury investigation and so I had to be very careful about what I said. But in hindsight, knowing what we know now, I wish I had made more of an issue of it," she said.

Mandel was convicted of mail fraud and racketeering last August and sentenced to four years in prison. He was suspended from office pending his appeal.

Miss Gore is the only woman in Maryland history to run for Governor as the nominee of a major party.

She was criticized after the 1974 race for failing to pay her campaign debts, but she said she held a series of fund-raisers and recently was able to pay the debts.

Miss Gore, the Republican national committee woman from Maryland, said she isnot impressed by any of the announced or likely GOP candidates for governor.

She said Anne Arundel County Executive Robert Pascal, considered a likely candidate spends too much time talking about his motion campaign would cost and too little time talking about the issues.

"I'd much rather have him tell us about the tax problem, the inflation problem, the unemployment problem, the honest issue, and other political matters," Miss Gore said.

Miss Gore, 53, of Potomac, Md., sold her family restaurant business last December and began a new apartment in Baltimore so she could devote full time to Maryland politics.

Notre Dame course

A variety of approaches to teaching will be offered at the College of Notre Dame of Maryland this summer, beginning on June 2 with summer session number one.

The offerings will include credit courses given during the week and in the weekend College program. Non - credit courses will also be available and they will cover topics ranging from auto mechanics to time management.

Professional workshops and seminars for businesswomen, educators and creative writers are also offered.

Registration will continue throughout May.
