Black foster grandparents benefit white kids

By Fred Hines
AFRO Staff Writer

Although the federally funded Foster Grandparents Program (FGP) has a majority of black participants, it is based in Baltimore County and serves mostly white children, according to its coordinator.

Gayle Higginbotham, project director of FGP, said that the program has been based in Rosewood for six years and serves 65 percent white children, even though many of the foster grandparents come from Baltimore City everyday.

Recently, an attempt was made to have some of the volunteers of the program to be located in the Cherry Hill Day Care Center, but that effort ended last Friday, May 26, when the center finally proved unsuitable for the participants.

The pullout from Cherry Hill, where five participants were located, came only two weeks after the program received a federal grant for $149,258, Mrs. Higginbotham said.

The grant was obtained through ACTION, the federal government's agency for volunteer service expired March. The 60 volunteers are sponsored by the Family and Children's Society.

To be exact, 50 of the foster grandparents that participate are black, nine are white, and one is from India, Mrs. Higginbotham said.

"I find that to be horrible," Mrs. Higginbotham said about the program being located out in Rosewood. "They need to be located out in the community."

Mrs. Higginbotham, who is also black, said that there is a need for foster grandparents to help in juvenile services systems.

Foster grandparents are retired Americans with low incomes who must be at least 60 and willing to work with disadvantaged children.

The program claims to help 50,000 children nationwide in some 450 child care institutions throughout the country.

After 40 hours of training, foster grandparents spend four hours a day, five days a week divided, usually, between two children.

They receive $1.60 an hour, a meal each day, an annual physical examination and transportation is arranged for them.

Rates on parking lot meters increase

The price for municipal parking lot meters went up this week.

The announcement was made by Hugo Liem, commissioner of Transit and Traffic.

However, he pointed out it would take about six weeks to convert the meters on 13 of the lots. The rates went up at 12:01 a.m., Monday, May 29.

"We have the meters converted in four of the lots already," said Liem. "The others will be converted as soon as we have the parts for them."

Liem explained that the higher rates are a "general increase for all municipal operations.

"The rate increase is necessary to stay competitive with the private operations," he pointed out. "Anyway, the city needs the revenue."

The lot locations already under the new rates are:

BG and E to reduce gas rates for customers

The Baltimore Gas and Electric Co. says it will reduce rates for its gas customers over a 12-month period due to a $4.3 million refund the company has received from its natural gas supplier.

Spokesman Vernon Stricklin said the Columbia Gas Transmission Corp. has refunded more than $4.3 million to the utility after the federal Energy Regulatory Commission ruled that Columbia's rate increases were too high.

He said the reduced rates resulting from the refund will appear in the gas fuel adjustment on customer bills, rather than a separate credit.

Stricklin said Columbia began charging higher rates in 1976, pending commission approval. He said the federal agency approved a smaller increase, resulting in the refund of excess funds collected.

The rest of the refund comes from the company's portion of federal and state income tax refunds received by Columbia, he said.

Steny Hoyer joins Lee's ticket

It was the best of times and it was the worst of times for Steny Hoyer because he wanted to be governor but had to face reality.

Hoyer Wednesday announced he was withdrawing from the race to join acting Gov. Blair Lee's ticket because of an inability to raise money for television campaign spots.

If elected Lieutenant governor, he said he will be a policy maker and expects to be the number two man "in theory as well as in fact."

Hoyer said one of the reasons he could not get enough support for his own campaign was because his job as Senate President gave him low visibility.

"The polls show that those who know me and my record have a favorable opinion of both," Hoyer said. "But the polls also reflect that I am one of the least known candidates for governor."

The 38 - year - old Democrat from Prince Georges County said he decided to run with Lee because the acting governor has "best demonstrated high personal integrity and a sound grasp of government.

He admitted that during the 1978 General Assembly he was at odds with the chief executive.

"I was critical of Lee and we dealt at arms length during the last session," he said. "But I was impressed with him because he showed he was willing to work with the Legislature."

Hoyer predicted the Lee - Hoyer ticket is a "team that will win" and one that will be "competent and effective" in running the state government.

Hoyer said he agreed to run as lieutenant governor but did not ask for or receive a "deal" requiring Lee to step down after one term.

Despite his low standing in the polls, Hoyer said all of the five gubernatorial candidates asked him to be their running mate.

"I'm the hottest commodity around but no one seems to be buying the product I'm selling," Hoyer said recently about the offers to run as lieutenant governor.

Acting Gov. Lee said Thursday he chose Hoyer as his running mate in the governor's race because Hoyer has political clout, a statewide viewpoint, character, integrity and other good attributes.

Lee told a news conference he wanted a lieutenant governor candidate who he could be confident would make a good governor should Lee die in office.

He said he wanted a "person who I can work well and harmoniously with for four years, with character and integrity . . . experience . . . and political clout, a strong base of his own."

Lee who is from Montgomery County, said he is not worried that their Washington suburban backgrounds will hurt them in getting Baltimore votes.

"I don't think where people come from makes much difference these days. It's what goes on inside their heads," Lee said.

He said both he and Hoyer have a "statewide viewpoint" that takes into account the interests of all areas of the state.

Lee added he did not promise Hoyer that he would serve only four years as governor and then step aside so the 38 - year - old Hoyer could run for governor in 1982.

Reaction to the Lee - Hoyer ticket among black politicians were more than favorable.

City Council Vice President Clarence "Du" Burns believes most of the political leaders in the city will support the ticket.

"When you get down to the hard - core practical guys they look for a winner," Burns said. "They don't make idealistic choices. They make practical choices. Lee's already ahead in the polls and this is going to make him go even higher."

Sen. Clarence Blount, the majority whip, called the team unbeatable and felt that the city's political leaders will support them.

Del. Arthur Murphy, chairman of the black caucus and head of the Vanguard Political Organization, said he was surprised at the decision but called it "a good political move."

Sen. Verda Welcome, said picking Hoyer was the best move Lee could have made.

"I've watched Lee grow over the years and Steny — well I'm behind him. They're the best men for the job."

Some political observers have said that a Lee - Hoyer ticket would not be balanced geographically, both being suburban Baltimore - Washington counties.

Hoyer like Lee said he did not feel that a ticket without a Baltimore candidate would be difficult to win with.

"Prince George's and Montgomery County are not a single entity," he said. "Prince George's County has more in common with Anne Arundel and Baltimore Counties than Montgomery. My record of the last 12 years shows great support for the Baltimore Metropolitan area."

But Francis Burch, the attorney general, denounced the ticket as "unfair to Baltimore."

"They'll be doing whatever they can to wheel and deal for Prince Georges and Montgomery counties and neglect the rest of the state," Burch said. "They'll look out for their own in the wealthy counties and the rest of the state will suffer.

"The people won't buy this," he went on. "They can pretty well write off the Baltimore metropolitan area."

Lee said Burch's campaign for the gubernatorial nomination appears to be dead. Pointing out Burch's criticism of the ticket showed Burch to be a politician rather than a stateman and a "bush - leaguer" rather than a major league player, Lee said.

Lee added Baltimore County Executive Theodore Venetoulis will be his toughest opponent for the nomination.
