Women play an important role in the church

By Antoinette Thornton

The women of Union Baptist Church, 1219 Druid Hill Ave., observed the month of May as Women's Month.

The culminating activities were held May 28, with Ms. Alexis M. Herman, director of the Women's Bureau Department of Labor speaking at the 11 a.m. service.

Ms. Herman told the women of Union Baptist that their theme, "Women in Movement," signifies that change is taking place.

"Women are not satisfied with the status quo. It suggests to us that women are on the move and will continue so until each of us has the right to equal opportunity regardless of our roots and that is to say, regardless of our skin color, our first language, our religion, our geographical location, financial status or any other artificial barriers that prevent us from participating fully in our nation's political, social and economic life."

Speaking of the church, the 29-year-old Ms. Herman stated the church has played a very special role in the life of black people. When blacks were cut off from the economical and political life in this country, Ms. Herman stated they found hope and spiritual life in the church.

"The church's role did not begin and end with service on Sunday morning. Indeed, it has performed many functions. It has served as a community center, as a source of help for the sick and the poor, and as an educational or training center.

"Throughout history, black women have played an important part in nurturing and sustaining the church, which is a spiritual foundation for living," said Ms. Herman.

She also told the women that black women can be proud of the contributions they have made to the cultural and economic development of America. For the past 200 or so years they have been among the most creative, resourceful, and enduring forces in America.

Ms. Herman says, "Black women face discrimination based on sex as well as race. They are consistently over-represented in low paying jobs, and this places women heads of families at an extreme disadvantage."

According to Ms. Herman, two out of four families headed by black women are poor, compared with one out of four families headed by a white woman.

A black woman who heads a family and works full time throughout the year is about three times as likely to be poor as a white woman who heads a family and also works full time, she said.

"A portion of the married women have husbands with low incomes, there is a need for two incomes to enable the family to have at lest a decent standard of living, particularly in the face of constantly rising inflation.

"Opportunities are greater today than at any point in history. Legislation to ensure equal employment opportunity for women in employment as well as education has unquestionably made a difference.

Mrs. Dorothy Mapp, director of the Union Baptist Day Care Center and the Harvey Johnson Recreation Center, was honored as Woman of the Year.

The sparks did not stop with the morning service, they continued at the memorial dedication for the women who are remembered for their service to the church.

Among the activities held at the church in May was a spring festival and bazaar, a mother and daughter dinner and a gong show.

Mrs. Melva Greene and Mrs. LaVern Stewart were chairpersons and the Rev. Vernon Dobson is pastor.

A minister speaks out

By Rev. Walter Thomas

The sociologists have often claimed that in the dark days of economic decline persons begin to flock to the church. The traditional hour of worship is no longer seen as a time to sleep and wash cars, instead persons prepare themselves to go to church to hear if there is "any word from the Lord." I firmly believe that sometimes God must drive us to our knees that we might learn the depth of our need for his guidance in our life.

There are always those who view God as one who should specialize in the satisfying of their wants. They seek God and even serve God for what he gives and what he does and what he promises.

Their alliance is doley for the promotion of their own self interest, and the real message of God rarely reaches them for they are too busy counting their chickens before the eggs have even hatched. Such people normally discuss God from their presence when his performance is less than what had been expected and anticipated.

Yet the Bible teaches that the wheat and tares must grow together, that is, those who serve God for what he gives must and will live and work beside those who serve God for who he is.

If there is one joy we as Christians can boast of, it is in seeing someone allow the power and purpose of God to infuse their life. In reality this is the message of Christian conversion; the changing of one's center of personal energy, and moving God from the periphery of one's life to the center of one's soul.

It is only as God becomes first, not merely a close second but first, in our living can we ever hope to fully discover the meaning of personhood for our lives. God has not made us to be puppets dancing to a divinely manipulated string, nor has he made us to chart the journey of our days along the course of happenstance.

I firmly believe that God means for us to allow his creative power to help us put the myriad chords in our soul into one grand melody of identity. We can not live meaningful and rewarding lives until we reach the point that we do not see ourselves as the mirrored reflection of others, instead we must see ourselves for who and what we really are.

The Women's Liberation movement is an attempt to discover and develop the identity of women as it seeks to move women from objects to subjects.

No longer do the women of our land desire to interpret their lives by the dictates of chauvinistic man. The words of the prophet so eloquently call any and all who are having problems with the understanding of themselves to "seek the Lord while He may be found and call upon Him while He is near." Only God can show us what we can be and only God can help us to become it. Faith then means seeing ourselves as God sees us.

Psalmist Baptist Church

The search has often ended here. We seek to make a better person and forget about a better world. An early economist, Adam Smith, put forth a philosophy called "laissez fair." He believed that individuals will always maximize their own self interest and thereby produce a good, even grand society. According to Smith, we need not tamper with the society for the "Invisible Hand" will work things out. This kind of philosophy has not only created polluted streams and desolate forestland, it has also left us with a nation steeped in corruption and decadence.

We may be emphasizing the personal quest and forgetting our social responsibility. We can not expect an invisible hand to do for us that which has been entrusted to our care and keeping.

The time has come for us to be concerned with the question of peoplehood. We must begin to develop communities whose appeal is the people who live therein. We need to re-dress the voices that cry "moral man and immoral society." The power of God that is at work in our lives to integrate our personality can also be relied upon to aid us in our struggle to make "his will be done on earth even as it is in heaven."

One of the thorns in our flesh as a people is the rising influence of drugs and narcotics. In all walks of life and in every age group our creative genius is being dulled by dope, barbituates, and pills. People are trying to escape into the inner chambers of an imagery world and it is time that we help them live in the real world as real people.

If our community sets its mind to do it, we can cut off the drug traffic, we can end the abuse of our people and their bodies, and we can begin to build a real community. However, strong we have become as individuals, that strength can be multiplied many times over as we utilize it in the group. We can do great things if the people have a mind to work.

I close by saying I believe not only in the power and purpose of God but I also believe in the people of God. Those who have found the answer for their living can now under the banner of His protection work for the upbuilding of a real community and the establishment of the Kingdom of God.

Rev. Anthony Muse, 22, serves as team minister

"When God called me in the ministry, he did not say I had to preach at a particular church or to an all black congregation.

"He just said preach. I am not concerned with the color of a person but only desire to assist and fulfill my calling."

The above statment was made by the Rev. Anthony Muse, 22 - year - old minister who has been appointed to serve as pastor of two churches in Ellicott City.

Rev. Muse, who was formerly assistant pastor of Union Memorial United Methodist Church at Harlem and Warwick Aves., has been appointed minister of Mount Zion United Methodist and Emory United Methodist, which has a predominantly white congregation.

The appointment was made by district superintendent, the Rev. Carroll Diggett.

"I will have no problems serving both churches, all people are members of God's kingdom," said Rev. Muse

The Georgia born minister is a graduate of Baltimore public schools and the Baltimore School of the Bible

He is now a student at Morgan State University majoring in psychology. Not only will he serve as pastor of two churches, but he will continue his volunteer work with theyouth at the School Community Council for Montrose and Hillen Education Center.

The handsome, six - foot minister who is single, says he has always enjoyed working and counseling young people, especially those who have problems at and in school.

"I always tell them whatever their goal in life is always put Christ in the center," said Rev. Muse.

The son of a minister, the late Rev. Timothy Muse, he also has a brother, the Ronald Muse, 27, who is associate minister of First United Apostolic Church, Liberty Heights Avenue and Copeland Road.

His job, he maintains, "is not just preaching from the pulpit. It is counseling patients and dealing with people 24 hours. You never punch in or out as a minister."
