On Black Classical Music

Dominique de Lerma

Dr. deLerma is professor of music at Morgan State University. He also hosts a radio show, "Melodies, Notes and Lyrics." Sunday, 11 a.m., WEAA-FM.

Rudolph Dunbar, conductor

There is a remarkable story being written by a conductor in England, who introduced the music of William Grant Still to much of Europe. The conductor is Rudolph Dunbar, who was born in British Guiana (now Guyana) in 1907. The story is going to be his autobiography, projected for publication in the United States in the near future.

His father encouraged not only the spirit of ambition, but the reality of excellence and, when Dunbar elected to secure training as a musician, he enrolled at the Juilliard School of Music — then called the Institute of Musical Art — in New York.

From here he went to the University of Sorbonne in Parris, studying there from 1927 to 1929, when the death of his father ended his immediate hopes for a degree.

Before 1929 was over, he found himself in Leipzig, where he was exposed to the negrophobia of the young Nazi party, and he returned to Paris, escaping the prejudicial atmosphere then beginning to sweep Germany.

In Paris, he met the widow of Claude Debussy who encouraged him to continue with his clarinet studies and in that year, 1930, he presented a clarinet recital at the Salle Chopin which was very well received.

As a specialist on the clarinet, Dunbar was later to be appointed to the editorial staff of "Melody Maker," to open his own school in London, and to write his significant "Treatise on the Clarinet," a method book published in 1939 by John E. Dallas in England which sold more than 10,000 copies.

This was about the time that he returned to the United States for a series of lectures, at which time he conducted a coast - to - coast broadcast over NBC of his orchestra work, "Ballad of the Twenty - First Century," wherein he experimented with rhythms derived from African music.

In 1942 he was selected to conduct the London Philharmonic in a concert at Albert Hall. More than 7,000 people attended this event, which was the first time a conductor so young (or black) had directed this orchestra.

During the war he was active as a journalist and war correspondent and, with the end of the war in 1945, he was engaged to conduct the Berlin Philharmonic — the same orchestra which a short time before had been used to entertain Hitler, Goering and other Nazi officials.

From Berlin he returned to Paris, and it was here that he presented four concerts under the general title of "Festivals de Musique Symphonique Americaine" consisting totally of music by the Afro-American, William Grant Still: the "Festival Overture" (which had been composed on Dunbar's request), "Old California," "Guiablesse" (music on Martinique themes), and Dr. Still's first two symphonies.

Following this success there was little more to hear from Dunbar. His letters to me promise that the autobiography will expose the cabalesque prejudice which was generated against him by the powers in England, where he elected to reside, nonetheless.

Perhaps the next major event did not arrive until 1973, when he toured the Caribbean as conductor of the Paris - based Orchestre Pasdeloup. Accompanying him on his trip was the black coloratura from Martinique, Christiane Eda-Pierre. She had graduated from the Paris Conservatory in 1957, winning first prize in singing, and gave her debut at the Opera Comique in 1961, with subsequent engagements at the Bolshoi Theatre in Moscow. In more recent times she has been heard in American opera companies.

The Rudolph Dunbar Archive was established in 1975 as part of the James Weldon Johnson Memorial collection at Yale University. Included here are many papers and manuscripts, as well as a cupronized plaster cast of the maestro, executed by Nommie Durell.

With a degree of impatience, we look forward to the publication of Dunbar's autobiography.
