robbers."

He also pledged to combine efforts with state and local law enforcement agencies to fight the drug problem in the city, saying it "is now taking potentially useful and creative young citizens out of our community."

Pettit, president of the Monumental Bar Association, promised to restore the state's attorney's office to "the high level of professionalism and respect" he says it has lost during the Swisher administration.

He also criticized Swisher for his use of plea - bargaining agreements and promised he would not use plea - bargaining as a tactic to win convictions.

"In my office, plea - bargaining will never be used as a device solely for the purpose of pumping up statistics when the budget is being considered or at election time," he said.

Pettit had developed wide black and white support for the vacant position of U.S. Attorney of Maryland, late last year and had even gotten the nod from President Carter and the White House before Sen. Paul Sarbanes nominated someone else.

Although some see his candidacy as a come - down from the U.S. Attorney's post, Pettit one of Carter's earliest supporters, does not see it that way.

"I don't consider it as going down," he said. "The state' attorney's office is one of the most powerful offices in the country. The problem is Swisher has not been doing his job and has let the people believe that it is going down.

"It can be a very powerful office when used effectively," he said.

Gangster' Webster raided

"Gangster" had maintained he was innocent of that charge and through the efforts of now retired Captain Dennis Mello who had arrested Webster as early as 1946.

In the officer's words:

"I've known him (Webster) since he was a small boy running in neighborhood gangs in the slums of East Baltimore."

In this instance, however, Mello said he doubted Webster's guilt and kept investigating until the right men were apprehended and "Gangster" thereby won his release.

Webster was arraigned in a city criminal court after his July 1 arrest.

Wes Ivey challenges Sen. Welcome

The brother of Linwood Ivey, director of the Urban Services Agency, Ivey was picked by Metro officials several months ago despite strong rumors that Alice Pinderhughes, executive director of the city school's early childhood education division, would be Metro's choice to run against Sen. Welcome.

Mrs. Pinderhughes told the AFRO Sunday because of previous commitments she would not seek the seat in this election.

The selection of Ivey completes Metro's slate which also includes Dels. Troy Brailey, Lloyal Randolph and Kenneth Webster for the House of Delegates and Mary B. Adams, Victorine Adams and Robert L. Haines for the State Central Committee.

According to a Metro sokeeman, Metro officials decided to go with the incumbent slate because the organization felt the incumbents had done a good job in the House.

Political sources said, however, that some Metro officials sought to drop Del. Webster from the ticket because of his performance during the last General Assembly session.)

Metro, according to sources, had been looking for a candidate to compete against Sen. Welcome since the split between her group, The Eourth Democratic Organization, and Metro over the Mondawmin McDonald's issue.

The late educator Isaiah White, had been Metro's first choice to challenge Senator Welcome.

Ivey, the owner of a West Baltimore tavern, had been a candidate for a City Council seat in 1975.

49 schools awarded safety certificates

Certificates of exceptional merit from the National Safety Council and places on the National School Safety Honor Roll have been awarded 49 Baltimore City public schools, announced Daniel Dixon, of city schools' Office of Safety.

During a special recognition day ceremony held recently at Mt. Royal Elementary School, Dixon said, "We are encouraged by this recognition of our efforts to build a good safety education program."

He added that in order to gain a place on the honor roll, a school must present a report of its safety program to a local committee composed of the school principal, the president of the PTA or a similar group, a student leader and the school's safety sponsor.

At the Mt. Royal ceremony Elrod Hendricks of the Baltimore Orioles was guest speaker, while Dr. Frank Bennett, city schools' safety coordinator and Donald Knox, principal - at - large for the Department of Education, presented certificates to students representing their respective schools.

—Bay College's license revoked

Board members voting yes, in favor of revoking the operating permit, were Thomas Maddox, Gertrude Crist, Harrison Ager, Lucy Keker, Mary Nock, Phillip Pear, and Austin Penn.

Charles P. Howard, acting president of the school, defended the school's ability to become a successful operation and said the team's report were lies.

He said the report's findings were based on past experience and "did not give appropriate credit for present planning and the implementation of methods and procedures to prevent recurrence' of past problems.

Bay is currently undergoing reorganization in federal bankruptcy court. It has reported debts of $1.1 million and assets of about $700,000.

From early May until early June the school had $124,000 in receipts but nearly $108,000 of that was from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Though state board commissioners voted to revoke Bay College's license, board sources stated the commissioners would give serious consideration to granting the school an extension on its license until officials could get their new plan under way.

The extension could last anywhere from six months to a year, the sources said.

Reports from sources close to the Bay College Board of Trustees revealed that one part of the new plan would be to dissolve the present board and administration and "bring in some fresh blood."

Group pickets shops selling S. African coins

By Fred Hines
AFRO Staff Writer

When members of the Baltimore Chapter of the Coalition to Suppport African Liberation (NCSAL) picketed coin city last month, most people who saw them just walked by.

They were picketing because the local coin dealer, located on Charles Street, sells Krugerands, gold coins, minted and sold by the South African government to the United States and European markets.

The coins that are sold through outlets such as Coin City are composed of one ounce of gold and worth slightly less than $200 each. They are mined by South Africans who get only $3 a day.

NCSAL maintains that along with Coin City, at least four outlets in Baltimore sell the Krugerand. They are R. H. Martin Co., Harford Coins, Michael Merril, and East Coast Coin Exchange.

In a letter asking the five outlets to stop selling the coin, NCSAL says: "Sales of the Krugerand coin, of which the United States accounted for 50 percent or 320 million dollars in 1977, go directly to buy weapons that prop up the apartheid system and oppress the African people."

When asked if he had sold any Krugerands, all Coin City manager Bill Korb Jr., would say is "I don't have any."

Korb also said: "The problem is not me selling them, I'm the lowest man on the totem pole. So it seems as though if they wanted to picket they should go to the place where it is manufactured."

Peter Ray, a volunteer for the Baltimore chapter of NCSAL, said it is not necessary for the coin dealers to keep the Krugerands in their store in order to sell them.

"They're pretty smart," Ray said, referring to the local coin dealers. "Hardly any coin dealers keep it (the Krugerand) in stock because gold prices vary everyday.

"A couple times we acted like customers and they gave a sales pitch you wouldn't believe. But if you have someone call up with a voice that sounds like a black man, they will say they don't have them."

Someone who is interested in purchasing Krugerands calls a coin dealer who orders it from a broker.

According to the American Committee on Africa, there are three big distributors of Krugerand in the United States. They are J. Aron and Co., Republic National Bank, and Mecotta Metals Inc.

The "big three" distribute in 250 coin lots to a dozen large currency exchange brokers who in turn fill orders from coin dealers. Deak and Company is one currency exchange broker located in Washington, D.C.

NCSAL will be picketing again in front of Coin City on Saturday, July 8 and are seeking some additional steps also.

What we want is a written statement that they won't sell them, Ray said. "We also want to approach City Council to have them pass a resolution against selling of the Krugerand."

Happy Birthday, Shanell!

By Ann Sagi
AFRO Staff Writer

Shanell Jones, nicknamed "Sunshine," celebrated her second birthday July 1.

Her family and friends had a big birthday party to celebrate.

That is not unusual. What was unusual was the setting for the party — the pediatrics unit of University Hospital.

Eight months ago, Shanell swallowed lye residue. Since then, the little girl has undergone surgery 15 times. Five of these operations were major throat and stomach surgery.

Shanell Jones

The daughter of George and Nedra Jones, 1600 block of North Ave., Shanell got her nickname because she "brought light into my life," her mother said.

And even though she has been through an ordeal that would make the friendliest person crabby, Shanell lives up to her nickname.

"She is super-friendly. Shanell is just adorable. She loves to play 'Peek-a-Boo' and frankly, she has everyone here at the hospital wrapped around her little finger," said Kathleen Murphy, her nurse.

Ms. Murphy said the two-year-old rarely gets cranky, but when she does, a nap restores her bubbly spirits.

Shanell was the happy guest of honor at her birthday bash. About 150 doctors, nurses, friends and family attended the celebration.

There were two cakes, ice cream, munchies and soda.

Shanell raked in the presents — dresses, jewelry, toys, bathing suits and even goldfish.

Then all the kids went to the hospital cafeteria for more food — hot dogs, french fries and soda.

Mrs. Jones said she wants this to be "Sunshine's" last birthday to be celebrated in the hospital.

"I hope she comes home in about a month," she said.
