UNCF sees new trend in black philanthropy

NEW YORK — "The year 1978 represents a landmark for black philanthropy," according to Christopher F. Edley, executive director of the United Negro College Fund.

"For the very first time, we are seeing national black organizations rallying massive financial support to preserve America's repositories of black culture and thought, the black colleges."

Two of the national organizations Edley credits with having created a trend of solid support for the black schools are The Links, Inc. and the Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, both black women's organizations.

The Links was the first national organization to adopt the United Negro College Fund as a nationwide project. The 32-year-old service group pledged $500,000 to UNCF in 1970.

Last month, when the organization held its 21st national assembly in Chicago, the Links pledged an additional $150,000, the last installment on the half - million dollar pledge.

"We think of the Links as representing not only a chain of friendship but a chain of purpose," explained Mrs. Pauline Ellison. "We can think of no better way to support black higher education in America than by giving to the United Negro College Fund."

According to newly - elected Links president Julia Purnell, the group plans to continue its fund raising efforts on behalf of UNCF. "We want to take our contributions well beyond the half-million dollar mark," she said.

Alpha Kappa Alpha, a 70 - year - old sorority pledged $500,000 to UNCF in 1976. Last July the group which has long supported community service and educational programs, gathered for its convention in Houston. There, former AKA Supreme Basileus Bernice Sumlin presented Edley with a check representing the last installment of the sorority's pledge — $331,000. With this contribution, the AKAs topped their original commitment to the college fund by nearly $10,000.

According to newly - inaugurated Supreme Basileus Barbara J. Phillips, the AKAs are acutely aware of the importance of maintaining the 41 UNCF colleges and universities.

"AKA represents 70,000 black, college - trained women," said Mrs. Phillips. "A significant portion of our membership was educated at UNCF schools; they have first - hand knowledge of the quality, vitality and historical imporatnce of UNCF's member institutions."

Another black women's group helping to raise the receipts of UNCF's annual drive is the Zeta Phi Beta Sorority. Comprised of 45,000 college graduates, the organization recently celebrated its 58th anniversary with a convention in Houston. There, Zeta Phi Beta Grand Basileus Janice G. Kissner presented the group's 1978 contribution to the college fund — a check for $50,000.

Although Zeta Phi Beta has supported the fund on a chapter by chapter basis, this is the first time the group has given as a national body. Now, the organization plans to make an ongoing commitment to UNCF.

Explaining the sorority's enhanced support for the college fund, Mrs. Kissner noted that the group has always been "a community - conscious action - oriented organization."

Furthermore, Mrs. Kissner pointed out that "those of us who have enjoyed the wonderful educational nutriment offered by predominantly-black institutions of higher learning know the value of supporting these schools on a consistent basis."

"These contributions pointed to a new sense of commitment within the black community," said Edley. "More and more, blacks are able to channel discretionary income into charitable giving. Realizing this, black organizations are now making a concerted effort to maintain the schools which have educated much of their membership. Although, since 1970, black organizations contributed well over a million dollars to the college fund, we believe this is only the beginning."

Edley also said that figures for alumni contributions to UNCF were further indication of a general upswing in black support for the colleges. A 1977 research study revealed that alumni support of UNCF's 41 colleges and universities had more than quadrupled in the last six years. In fact, 1977, the average alumni gift to private black colleges was greater than the average gift to private colleges and universities nationally.

"We look to a time when black support will brighten the financial picture at UNCF schools. We believe this support will begin to offset the fact that tuitions at our schools are roughly two - thirds the national average. It will enable us to continue educating students who come from economically handicapped families," said Edley.

GROUP SUPPORT — At its convention in Houston, the Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority presented United Negro College Fund Executive Director Christopher F. Edley (L) with a check for $331,000 to help support the UNCF. On hand for the presentation were AKA president Bernice Sumlin (second from L); NAACP Executive Director Benjamin L. Hooks and U.S. Treasurer Azie Taylor Morton (R). Mrs. Morton is an alumna of Huston - Tillotson College, one of the UNCF-supported schools. The 70-year-old AKA sorority has, since 1976, raised $509,075 in support of the UNCF.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Florida A and M University has gained three new degree programs and lost eight as the Board of Regents acted to end duplication among the three oldest state universities and to enhance offerings at FAMU.

The program changes, involving FAMU, Florida State University and the University of Florida, are part of the state's desegregation plan approved by the United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Robert L. Allen, public relations director for FAMU, told the AFRO, "These three schools needed the most work in equalizing education because they date back to the years of segregation and the same vestiges of segregation still exist."

The board adopted — almost intact — a program proposal presented by its Program and Planning Committee. All changes are to become effective no later than the fall of 1982.

The board struck down Florida State's bachelor's and master's degree programs in industrial arts and vocational education and the agriculture and agricultural extension education, agronomy, soil sciences, plant sciences and general horticulture.

The remaining programs are in animal science, entomology and structural pest control, agri-business and ornamental horticulture.

Other FAMU bachelor's degree programs terminated are library science, home economics and home economics education and speech and hearing.

Students enrolled in programs being terminated will earn their degrees, but no new students will be admitted.

Faculty members in the terminated programs will be transferred to related disciplines if possible, or considered for non - related positions and as a last resort, dropped, if nothing can be found for them to do.

Dr. Roy McTarnaghan, vice chancellor for academic affairs for the state university system, said that before a faculty member is dropped, every effort for other employment will be made in his - her behalf.

McTarnaghan also said that program changes at FAMU will increase the enrollment at FAMU by 300 to 400 students in the next three to four years.

University of Florida's bachelor's and master's programs in business education. Both master's programs will be shifted to FAMU.

Other new programs coming to FAMU are a master's of business administration and a bachelor's in landscape design, graphic arts, film and electronic media and broadcast engineering, physical therapy medical records administration, respiratory therapy and health management.

FAMU and FSU were also instructed to establish four cooperative master's degree programs in education administration, guidance, counseling, adult and continuing education and secondary education.

The board also changed FAMU's nursing school to an upper division facility (junior, senior) beginning this fall and outlined several other steps to be taken to strengthen the program by 1982.

Of the programs eliminated, FAMUs division of rural development development (agriculture) was hardest hit. Five of the nine bachelor's programs in agriculture were eliminated: general
