Nursing center admission ban lifted

A ban on admissions to the Federal Hill Nursing Center has been lifted, but state health officials said the nursing home may not increase its occupancy level before Sept. 30.

State investigators had cited inadequate staff and poor quality nursing care as problems that needed correction.

Sonya Gershowitz, owner of the Federal Hill Center, said that since July 29 she has hired seven registered nurses, seven licensed practical nurses, 12 certified medical technicians, 50 nursing assistants and three transportation aides.

Mrs. Gershowitz said she fired several employees after the state evaluations, but could not say how many employees were filling new positions or simply relacing fired workers.

Under the agreement reached by the state and the nursing home, the facility cannot raise its patient population above the current level of 281. New patients can be admitted only when a patient leaves or dies, and with the approval of the Baltimore City Professional Standards review organization.

Another provision of the agreement requires the nursing home to accept technical assistance provided by PSRO, which is a private organisation composed of doctors and nurses.

St. Peter Claver's observes anniversary

By Elizabeth M. Oliver

Saturday marks the 90th anniversary celebration Baltimore's leading Catholic congregation, that of St. Peter Claver Church, 1546 N. Fremont Ave., at Pennsylvania Avenue.

The date is the Feast of St. Peter Claver, a joyous occasion for the church and the city's Catholics as well.

The special 90th anniversary mass will begin at 4 p.m. Saturday with a reception to follow in the Parish Hall.

Rev. Henry E. Dickerson, SSJ, is pastor. Succeeding him in October is Rev. Wayne E. Wigglesworth, SSJ, who will assist at the 90th fete rites along with Brother Damina Wilson, SSJ. John Briscoe is acolyte. The Saturday mass fulfils Sunday obligations.

Lawrence Cardinal Shenah, retired and Archbishop William Borders have been invited to attend.

Former pastors and priests who have served at St. Peter Claver will be present, including Fathers Henry Offer, Edward Cassidy, Thomas O'Connor, John Hoffman and William McKenna.

Among longtime members are Frank Sewell, Bessie Goodin, Laura Ford, Marie Murphy, Victorine Adams, whose father Joe Quille, was an altar boy; Mary Butler, Annie Young, Corrine Lucas, George Neal, Mr. and Mrs. George Young, Annie Jones and Raymond Barber.

The Franciscan Sisters of Glenriddle, Pa. have been connected with the parish since founding and have given valuable service and are always included in the history of the church.

The St. Peter Claver congregation took prominent note of the new Pope John Paul I in its Sunday September 3 program with rejoicing.

Church historians claim the life of a parish should not be measured merely in years but in services, sacrifices and blessings.

The most complete history was written by a former pastor, Father Henry J. Offer, SSJ, who is now pastor of St. Francis Xavier in East Baltimore.

St. Peter Claver was dedicated on Sunday, Sept. 9, 1888 shortly after the canonization of Peter Claver and is the first parish in the world dedicated to him.

The Josephite Fathers the founders, saw the need of a church which would serve as a beacon light in the western area of Baltimore and to administer to the needs of the Catholics who then travelled a great distance to attend mass.

The church also served the Josephite Major Seminary which was a short distance away at Pennsylvania Avenue and St. Mary's Street.

The Josephite Fathers, a group of priests formally known as St. Joseph's Society of the Sacred Heart, had come to the United States in 1871 from Mill Hill in London, England.

The founder and first superior, Herbert Cardinal Vaughan, along with four other priests in that year formed the nucleus of a group of dedicated priests who worked and would continue to work among blacks.

Around April 1888 the Josephites acquired property at Fremont Avenue and Bloom Street for the new church.

On the property stood, according to St. Joseph's Advocate of April 1888, a small Protestant meeting house. This building was the Whatcoat Methodist Episcopal Church. Before the Josephites bought it, however, it had been used from January to August of 1884 by the newly formed parish of St. Gregory the Great, at that time known as St. Charles Borromeo parish.

St. Gregory's rented the building from a family by the name of Stewart, dedicated it and used it as a temporary church until the new St. Gregory's (the brick building which stands beside the present church) in its location at Baker and Gilmor Sts., began to be used.

Along with this property, the lot and house adjoining the property to the south were purchased and the compound that is now St. Peter Claver's began to exist.

This first St. Peter's was erected upon the original church structure; a sanctuary and two sacristies were added to the meeting house.

The dedication cermonies of St. Peter Claver Church on Sept. 9, 1888 were impressive. Despite heavy rains, some 1500 marchers, representatives of many Catholic societies, walked in the procession which wound its way from Calvert Street [illegible] to Mount Avenue to Mother Street to Pennsylvania Avenue to the church.

His eminence, James Cardinal Gibbons dedicated the church, and the sermon at the solemn high Mass was delivered by the Right Rev. A. A. Curtis, Bishop of Wilmington, Delaware.

The Bishop's sermon on Liberty was forthright and outspoken and it serves even 75 years later as an example of liberal thinking; his concluding remark was: "The church will have its glory and triumph in the colored race and for aught I know, be the salvation of this nation."

Father Lambert Welbers was the Josephite who steered the course of the young church during its early years.

A few weeks after the dedication of St. Peter Claver Church, a school was opened in its basement. Miss Caroline Cook and a Miss Gillis conducted that school for about three years, until, through the charity of Miss Mary Abell, of a prominent Baltimore family and later Sister Mary Joseph of the Visitation Monastery in Wilmington, a new school building was constructed.

This school, built at a reported cost of $17,000, was dedicated in September of 1891 and was placed in charge of three Sisters of Saint Francis from Glen Riddle, Pennsylvania.

The building, modernized in 1953, is still in use and the Franciscan Sisters still teach in the school.

In connection with St. Peter Claver's church and school, the religious society of the Mission Helpers of the Sacred Heart began. A Mrs. Hartwell, assisted by Miss Elinor Treacy and a Mrs. Miller, had been quietly carrying on work with the young women of St. Peter Claver parish who, in the words of St. Joseph's Advocate of July, 1890, had to "earn their bread."

These young women were given through the Guild "opportunity to learn not only reading, writing, and accounts, but also that industrial cunning of the fingers which will enable them to make their own clothes, etc., if not qualify them as professional seamstresses, dressmakers, and what not."

90 YEARS OLD — A special mass will be held Sept. 9, 4 p.m. at St. Peter Claver's Catholic Church, 1546 Fremont Avenue as part of the 90th anniversary celebration of the church.

Bethel Church is still growing

There were 600 members of Bethel A.M.E. Church in 1975 when the Rev. Dr. John R. Bryant was assigned as pastor of the oldest black independent church in Maryland.

Since the 34-year-old minister has taken over as pastor of Bethel at Druid Hill Avenue and Lanvale Street, there has been a tremendous increase in membership. Every Sunday since Rev. Bryant has been at the church, at least five citizens have joined the church.

His goal was to reach 3,000 members by the end of this year. However, the dynamic young preacher reached his goal on Aug. 27 at the 11 a.m. services when more than 25 people joined.

Since 1975, the church's annual income has grown from $67,000 to $302,000 in 1978. Rev. Bryant says, "Bethel is a church that struggles to be Bible based.

"Its worship services are full of joy and the singing and preaching are done with power. Many people have been attracted to this church because of its concern for the community."

Bethel runs an outreach center where clothing and food are given to those in need. Free counseling is available, scholarships are awarded and more than 300 missionaries are involved in community affairs.

Rev. Bryant added, "The church has also acquired jobs for the unemployed and a community newspaper is in print. The church staff now consists of 15 employees.

A three day conference sponsored by the Northeastern Jurisdiction Ethnic Evangelism for the United Methodist Churches will be held Sept. 8-10 at the Lord Baltimore Hotel.

More than 500 delegates from 14 states are expected to attend the conference that will open with a fellowship dinner on Sept. 8, 6 p.m. at the hotel.

The purpose of the conference is to enable ethnic persons to understand the situations and human dilemmas they face. Also, to provide resources and instruction to make them more effective as evangelistic witnesses proclaiming Jesus Christ as Lord to their fellow church members. The program will focus upon the unique evangelistic opportunities and responsibilities of ethnic groups.

The Rev. Pelton E. May of Easton, Md., chairperson of the event says the Saturday program will be the highlight of the conference and he expects it to have a significant impact upon the delegates and the community.

The Rev. Dr. Phillip Edwards is serving as coordinator of the conference with the Rev. Forrest Stith, program council director for the Baltimore annual conference and the Rev. Kenneth Greene, pastor of Christ United Methodist Church as resource person.

Delegates will be attending local churches 11 a.m. Sept. 10 and the event will climax at the Civic Center 3 p.m. with Bishop Roy C. Nichols of Pittsburgh, Pa., as speaker.

Youth and young adults from area churches are asked to make and display banners on the theme, "Affirming Our Unity in Christ Through Evangelism."

Special music will be by the Morgan State University Choir directed by Nathan Carter and the 500 voice choir representing churches in Baltimore and the Eastern Shore.

BROWN MEMORIAL BAPTIST Church, 2000 N. Fulton Ave., will sponsor Kenneth Glover in a concert on Sept. 15, 7:30 p.m. at Poly Technic Institute auditorium, 1400 W. Cold Spring Lane. The Rev. Douglas I. Miles is pastor. Mr. Glover recently sung as guest soloist at the Progressive National Baptist Convention last month in Los Angeles, Calif. A native of New Jersey, he has traveled extensively spreading the gospel in song. For ticket information call 426-2458 or 669-7388.

Ministers endorse Rev. Moyd

The Rev. Dr. Olin P. Moyd, pastor of Mount Lebanon Baptist Church, gets wide endorsements from fellow ministers, churches, and denominations for his election to the Maryland House of Delegates.

He was endorsed by the powerful Ministerial Alliance early in 1978, the Rev. Wendell Phillip is president. He was endorsed by the United Baptist Missionary Convention of Maryland, Rev. Matthew R. Silver, president, during the Annual Session of the United Baptist Missionary Convention in May, 1978.

The New Day Democratic Club and the Fourth District Democratic Organization, in which he has served as president and chairman of the Board have endorsed Dr. Moyd. He also has the endorsement of City-Wide Black Unity Committee, Mr. Kenneth Beavens is chairman.

When asked how he accounted for this outpouring of support, Dr. Moyd said: "Well, during my three years as associate minister and 14 years as pastor of Mt. Lebanon Baptist Church, I have tried to be faithful, honest and cooperative with parishioners, pastors, churches and interdenominational groups.

"I have also been busy trying to improve neighborhood and community life. I have served as instructor and lecturer, mainly in Christian Education and Black Religious history across this city, state, and nation."

"Evidently people have appreciated my service which is expressed by their endorsement. "However, elections are not won by endorsements. Elections are won by votes. So I am working hard ringing doorbells, calling and writing to urge my friends to get out and pull Lever 9-D in the 40th Legislative District on September 12th."

"I believe they will vote for me because they know that my vote in the legislative chambers in Annapolis will always be a vote for the improvement of human life in the here and now."
