Oblate Sisters attend blessing of statue

Ryales photo

By Elizabeth M. Oliver

One of the most auspicious occasions in all Catholic church history occurred here in Baltimore Sept. 9 in old St. Mary's Seminary Chapel at 600 N. Paca St.

The event was the blessing of the statue of Mother Superior Elizabeth Lange, one of the founders prior to the Civil War of the Oblate Sisters of Providence, the only order of black Catholic nuns in the world.

The lindenwood statue, first in history to a black woman, stands in the lower chapel of the historic church along with that of Sister Elizabeth Ann Seton, the first American born saint. Both wood carvings are done by the same sculptor, Giocomo Vincenzo Mussner in Italy.

Fr. John Sullivan and his fellow Sulpician priests gave the statue of Sister Lange. The statue of Saint Elizabeth Ann Seton is the gift of John Sims, a leading personality in the historic Seton Hill neighborhood which is Baltimore's old French Quarter.

The Seton Hill open house over the weekend, highlighted by the blessing of the statue, also showed off the old homes of the area nearby the famous Seton House where Sister Elizabeth Ann Seton once resided.

Both she and the first Oblate Sisters took their vows in the lower chapel. Mother Lange first established the home for the Oblates in a house on George Street a short distance from the chapel.

The AFRO home office at the foot of Druid Hill Avenue is in the same historic district which is bordered by St. Mary's, Paca, George and Jasper Sts. and Druid Hill Avenue.

Archbishop William D. Borders was the principal celebrant of the eucharistic liturgy in praise of the founding of the Oblate Sisters. The Most Reverend Borders is Archbishop of Baltimore, the Prime See, the first Catholic area in the United States.

The chalice used for communion belonged to Fr. James Joubert (1777 - 1843) of the Suplician Fathers who used the same golden cup in his days at the Seminary. He too is considered a founder of the Oblate Sisters.

Taking part in the rites were Oblate Sisters Elaine Frederick, soloist and organist; Sister Marie Infanta Gonzales, present mother general of the order; Sister Reginald Gerdes, director and Sister Paul, administrator for the restoration of St. Francis Church which is under the Oblates.

Other participants were Fr. Sullivan and Rev. Edward J. Frazer, provincial of the Sulpician Fathers.

Sister Lange has been likened to Harriet Tubman in that she braved prejudices and the bitter times prior to the Civil War to seek freedom and education for black persons.

Historic documents say she arrived from Cuba and with her father's money was able to forward her ideas and establish the community of nuns to educate black women and children, an unheard of project in the early 1800's in Baltimore.

The 150th anniversary year (1978 - 79) of her establishing the Oblates is being celebrated by all the Oblate communities in the nation and abroad.

The main Oblate centers and schools and institutions are in Florida, Illinois, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Washington, D.C. and Costa Rica.

HIGHLIGHT of the ceremonies last Saturday in the lower chapel of Old St. Mary's Seminary Chapel was the appearance of four mothers superior of the Oblate Sisters of Providence. Shown are (L to R) Mother General Marie Infanta Gonzales, present head of the mother house on Gun Road in Catonsville and the former superiors general, Mother Mary of Good Counsel Baptiste, New Orleans; Mother Mary William Hundley, Brooklyn, N.Y. and the oldest, Mother Mary Theresa Shockley. The four leading personalities are centered by the statue of the first mother superior, Mother General Elizabeth Lange who was from Cuba and established the order which remains the only order of black Catholic nuns on the world.
