The top man in any show biz caper is the producer, and Eddie Arnold was the executive producer of the pilot show.

BALTIMORE CITY:

Hollywood East

Emcee of the proceedings was veteran jazz host with the golden tones, Yale Lewis of Washington, D.C. With him is Brenda Alford, singer of note who is currently appearing in D.C. Yale is host of the WETA - FM program "Jazz Plus," which originates in Washington, and has provided inserts and interviews for the National Public Radio network's "Jazz Alive" series.

Clea Bradford is from the West Coast, but came to the Eastern seaboard in conjunction with her singing career, and wound up living in the D.C. area, while filling engagement up and down the area. She has just completed an engagement at Blues Alley in D.C.

First there was the filming of "The Senator," starring Alan Alda. That's when the word went out that Baltimore was a great place to make films, that the city offers top cooperation.

Next came ". . . And Justice For All," starring Al Pacino, which is still in the filming process around town. Once again, there was high praise for the facilities Baltimore had to offer.

Now comes a full - scale TV pilot production of a proposed new show called "Jazz Insights."

It is the brainchild of Producer Eddie Arnold who had the dream of a show devoted to jazz. Along with two partners, a private company, AFG productions was formed to try to "get the show on the road."

Theme of the pilot program was to be "The Military and All That Jazz," which would trace the history of the armed forces and jazz.

The U.S. Air Force band, "Airmen of Note," was secured for the pilot, along with Maj. Gen. Thomas E. Clifford who came over to take part in a panel discussion on jazz and the armed forces.

Yale Lewis, noted jazz authority was engaged to be master of ceremonies, and Yale, also helped bring together some of the personnel who appeared on the pilot.

The facilities of WNVT - TV, out of Northern Virginia was leased, complete with studio cameras, sound mixing console and all the rest of the paraphernalia needed.

Now for a place to hold the taping session. Baltimore was picked, and the Famous Ballroom engaged — which is the home of the Left Bank Jazz Society of Baltimore.

In fact, most of the audience were patrons and friends of LBJS, which is one of the most knowledgeable jazz audiences in the country.

Some of the musicians engaged for the date, all of whom worked for the barest minimum, included noted tenor saxman, Buddy Tate, Singers Damita Jo, Clea Bradford and Brenda Alford.

Also Joe Clark and the trio, along with Bill Harris, guitarist and master of the blues.

Just to give a rough idea of the huge amount of work necessary to get the pilot on tape, it took almost 12 hours to set up all the necessary equipment, and over four hours to tape the one - hour pilot program.

This, of course, will be edited, graphics added, sound mixed and balanced and voiceover narration taped.

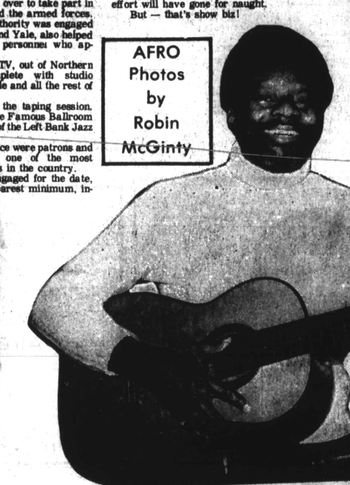
Finally, it will be ready to be viewed by prospective buyers. One of the major networks has expressed interest in the upcoming pilot.

If it is picked up, chances are that all the musicians will have 13 weeks of work while attempts are made to establish the show as a regular item.

If it is not — then all this time, money and effort will have gone for naught.

But — that's show biz!

AFRO Photos by Robin McGinty



Bill Harris and a guitar go together like black-eyed peas and rice. Bill, who just happens to own a soul-food; jazz and blues place in D.C. called "Pigfoot," is an acknowledged historian on blues. He has recorded with many of the greats, and hosts a radio show on WPFW-FM on Saturday mornings.

Buddy Tate is one of the greats of the tenor sax, and is currently shepherding Scott Hamilton, young saxman with whom he is filling dates. Buddy and Scott recently completed a gig at the Maryland Inn in Annapolis. Tate, of course, was one of the stalwarts of the Count Basie band of the 40s and 50s.

If you have a high fidelity system in your home, and have tried to patch in tape recorders, or what not, then you can recognize the paraphernalia it takes for a full - scale TV production. This is just a small part of the audio mixing equipment used for this pilot project.

The Joe Clark trio seems to pop up all over town, and has for a few years. Joe is a tenor saxist, and the trio put together for this date included Terry Pulmieri, bass, and Baltimorean Jimmi Johnson, drums. Actually, each of the three head their own groups for occasional gigs, but come together whenever necessary.

Posing prettily are Damita Joe and Ernie Hennsley. Damita is an internationally known singer, who recently completed a tour on the Playboy Club circuit, before filling engagements in Australia. Ernie heads the U.S. Air Force big band called Airmen of Note. He is the conductor, and the 18-piece jazz band plays all the charts of top big bands, plus a lot of originals.
