NAACP chief suspended

UPPER MARLBORO, Md. — William Martin, has been suspended for negotiating a school the president of the busing agreement with the chairman of the Prince George's County chapter of the NAACP, county school board.

Martin has 15 days to appeal the suspension. He said he would fight it because the agreement, which limits the busing of elementary school children who already live in integrated neighborhoods, "is sound and Martin's temporary replacement is Josie supportable."

Bass. Bass filed the complaint with the national NAACP office that resulted in Martin's suspension.

The agreement has been criticized by NAACP leaders who say it could result in some integrated schools becoming all black. The agreement has not gone into effect and still faces review by the county school board and the national NAACP office.

Rep. Clay to update Hatch Act

WASHINGTON — Cong. William Clay, D. Mo., says that existing law governing the political activities of postal and federal employees "is contradictory, harsh, overly restrictive and unfair in its administration."

The congressman has therefore introduced legislation to update the Hatch Act by permitting federal civilian and postal employees the right to participate voluntarily in political activities, so long as they do not interfere with the integrity of good government.

The legislation, he points out, has not been brought into conformity with the realities of the 70s since its enactment into law in 1939.

File injunction against Antioch

Homestead-Montebello college center goes to court in attempt to stay open

A predominantly black division of Antioch University has gone to court to keep from being shut down permanently by its parent university.

Attorneys for the Homestead-Montebello Center at 508 N. Caroline St., on Thursday, March 8, filed an injunction in Baltimore City Court preventing Antioch from ending a five year agreement with the center that provides financial aid and degree status for students under the Antioch University's name.

"The order was signed by Chief Judge Anselm Sodaro. University officials have 15 days to show cause why the judge should not rule in the center's favor.

The court action is a result of two weeks of negotiation between Homestead-Montebello and Antioch officials which broke down Wednesday after Antioch refused to extend the agreement's March 15 deadline further.

The agreement's original deadline had been Jan. 1, 1979 but had been extended last December so Montebello center officials could have time to seek accrediation separate from Antioch for its own degree program and and financial aid.

But center officials, according to the injunction suit, contend that the four month period was not enough time for the center to negotiate separate accrediation from the State board for higher education, and requested an extension from Antioch.

If the judge should find in favor of the university the Homestead-Montebello students will be without a means of an education and will either have to transfer to another school or be absorbed by Antioch-Baltimore, a campus wholly owned by Antioch University.

There are 177 students currently attending the center. Of the 177, 80.9 percent of them are black with an average age of 32. Center officials stated 98.7 percent of the student body range from the age of 26 to 42 years old with jobs. There are 25 full and part-time instructors with master degrees or better.

The move by Antioch to sever its ties with the Homestead-Montebello center is not a new one. Two years ago it tried a similar action with its Washington division and is seeking to disaccociate itself from other affiliated campuses across the country in order to concentrate on its wholly-owned schools.

The other wholey owned school in the Baltimore area is Antioch Columbia in Columbia.

HRC— discrimination against insurance firm

The Maryland Human Relations Commission (HRC) has postponed a hearing originally scheduled for March 13 against a New York based insurance company because of a suit levied against HRC by the company.

HRC had charged Equitable Life Assurance Society in 1975 with discriminating against blacks, low-income people, women and those in certain occupations in the sale of its life, disability and health insurance policies.

But on Tuesday, March 13, Equitable filed a suit in Baltimore County Circuit Court which seeks to prevent the commission from holding a hearing on the grounds that only the insurance commissioner has the power to regulate insurance rates.

"They think we don't have a case. But I feel just as strongly that we do," said Russelle R. Fleisher, the attorney for the Human Relation Commission.

Ms. Fleisher said Equitable obtained the services of the Baltimore firm Niles, Barton and Wilmer to prove HRC lacks expertise in the area of insurance.

She said if the commission is allowed to hold a hearing on the Equitable case and the company is found guilty of discrimination, the commission may order it to make premiums for men and women.

Under Maryland law, insurance firms can use statistical proof to justify higher rates for men or women, but "arbitrary and capricious" discrimination is banned.

Equitable said it is justified in charging women higher disability insurance rates than men because of its experience in risks and claims.

It also said refusing policies to people who earn less than $11,000 a year in justified because Social Security benefits would cover the disability loses of those people.
