Cancer killing more blacks

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The cancer rate among black Americans has risen by 8 percent in the last 25 years and a House health subcommittee wants to know why more are dying of cancer than ever before.

The House Commerce Health Subcommittee, chaired by Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., this week opened the first full-scale congressional hearing to try to find out why the rate has risen for blacks.

Statistics compiled by the American Cancer Society show that every day 121 black Americans die of cancer — one every 12 minutes. And if the present trend continues, one black persons in every four will have cancer.

While the cancer rate for whites has dropped by 3 percent in the last quarter century, it has risen by 8 percent for blacks.

A subcommittee staffer said the committee is particularly interested in the exposure to industrial carcinogens or cancer agents in the inner city. Ronald Brown of the National Urban League will be called on to discuss the threat from carcinogens to poor people.

Among the subcommittee's witnesses will be Dr. Lasalle Leffall, the black president of ACS, and chairman of the department of surgery at Howard University.

In a message accompanying the ACS report, Dr. Leffall said more black Americans could be saved from the ravages of cancer if they knew more about available testing, had regular health check-ups, recognized warning signs, and knew many more forms of cancer are treatable.

"Most of the difference in black and white cancer rates have been attributed to environmental and social factors rather than to inherent biological characteristics," the ACS report said.

"Because a higher percentage of blacks than whites are in the lower socioeconomic group, risk of exposure to industrial carcinogens may be increased," it said.

The ACS report also showed that:

— About 44,000 blacks will die of cancer in the United States this year.

— The cancer death rate today in black American males (200 per 100,000 black men) is almost three times what it was 40 years ago.

— About 400 black American children under 15 will die from cancer this year.

— About 10,000 black Americans will die from lung cancer this year.

Capitol pages serve Congress in action

By Miles H. White

Five blacks including one from the Washington area were among 49 June graduates of the Capitol Page School, a special institution set up by Congress to provide equivalent high school education to youngsters serving as congressional pages.

The Washington student is Herbert Harris Jr., who lives with his mother Merle M. Harris at 368 23rd Pl., N.E. Moses Bassanio Winston, another graduate, is from Virginia and lives with his mother Mrs. Rose Winston at 819 Erich Road in Richmond.

Verian Dunbar, who also graduated, lives with his parents Mr. and Mrs. Verian Dunbar at 1722 Monroe St. in Baltimore.

The two other graduates are David K. Vinson of Denver, Colo. and Miss Michelle Grace Williams of Park Forest, Ill.

The pages serve in either the House or Senate and perform administrative, messenger and other duties for national legislators. The unique program is mandatory for all pages, who must be sponsored by a member of congress.

Harris, who entered the school during his senior year after attending Spingarn High School, said he was selected for the page job from among nearly 5,000 students who applied.

Harris was sponsored by House Majority leader Jim Wright (D - Tex. for the $600 - a month position. Some of the pages, who are on the Federal payroll, reportedly make as much as $850 monthly for the exclusive jobs.

"It really helped me," Harris said of the school," you don't know how much you don't know until you get around people who know what they should for their ages. I had to work harder."

Harris said he learned a lot from going to school with a lot of white classmates. "There are a lot of myths about white kids," he said, "most of them are untrue. White kids are no smarter or dumber than any other kids, they just usually have money."

Harris, who finished the year with an above 3.0 average, was a star player on the school's basketball team and had a number of games where he scored 50 points or more.

Harris led the team to its first championship trophy and was voted most valuable player for the year. He was later awarded the Woodward Foundation Scholarship Award for scholastic achievement and plans to attend Boston University to pursue a career in broadcast journalism.

While at Spingarn, Harris worked as a producer, reporter and sports writer for WOL - TV's "Potential" - television program. "I've always been talkative," he added, "and I've tried to harness that power in the media. I'm fascinated by how the television can reach such a large number of people."

Moses Bassanio Winston, who attended the school for two years after being sponsored by Congressman David Satterfield (D-Va.), was initially selected after a friend of the congressman contacted a counselor at his school, who recommended him for the position.

Winston had attended John Marshall High School in Richmond and plans to enter the U.S. Air Force Academy in the Fall. Winston wants to enter the space program later and found the school a big boost towards reaching his goal of becoming an astronaut.

"I was a little disappointed when they selected the three black astronauts for the space program," he said, "I wanted to be the first." Winston said he was recommended to the Academy by Rep. Satterfield as his first choice.

"When I decided to go to the academy, the congressman and his

"When I decided to go to the academy, the congressman and his aides all helped me," he said.

Winston said he found working on the House floor interesting. "We knew more of what was going on than a lot of the congressmen," he said," aides would call us up to find out what was going on."

The school, which is located on the third floor of the Library of Congress, conducts 45 - minute classes from 6:30 to 10:30 in the morning. The classes are much smaller than in public schools and there are more teachers to go around.

Winston said the smaller size of the classes allows students to get more attention than in a public school, but pointed out that the curriculum at the Page School is much more limited.

"My mother was a big factor," he added, "she raised me right.", Winston was a member of the National Honor Society at the school.

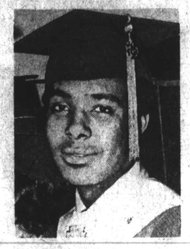
Verian Dunbar, another graduate of the school, which is accredited and a part of D.C. public school system, graduated from Frederick Douglass High School in Baltimore, whose alumni includes Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall.

Dunbar was selected for pageship by Maryland Representative Parren Mitchell after another student decided not to take it. Mitchell, who also went to Douglass High, wanted someone from his old school, Dunbar said.

Dunbar, who plans to enter Coppin State University in Maryland to pursue a degree in education, was the first black page to work in the Democratic Cloakroom, a main information center in the Capitol.

Dunbar and Winston were the only two blacks of six pages who worked in the center, which is considered an exclusive page position. The job required them to be aware of all activities on the floor and how votes were being cast. "We were the best informed persons on the Hill," Dunbar said.

VERIAN DUNBAR of Baltimore was among 49 Capitol Page School graduates in Washington.



M. BASSANIO WINSTON of Richmond was a graduate this month of the Capitol Page School in Washington.

Currently the school enrolls about 91 students, 61 for the House and 30 for the Senate. Besides, having congressional sponsorship the students must have high academic qualifications and initiative. Girls are included.

John C. Hoffman, pincipal of the school, sees students who are lucky enough to attend the special program as being better prepared to deal with new situations than the average student.

They experience "tremendous exposure and maturity" Hoffman said. "Mentally and physically, once they leave here they find the adjustment to college very easy, and 98 percent do go on to college," he added.

But to those who make it, the experience is long remembered and the rewards many. And to those so inclined, their first step towards a life - long career in the world of politics.

Comptroller's race underway

Douglass, Pressman square off

The two candidates for the office of city comptroller — challenger Del. John Douglass and incumbent Hyman Pressman — squared off in their first encounter of this election year last week with Pressman going straight for Douglass' throat.

Twhat could set the tone for the comptroller's campaign for the campaign, Pressman came out of his corner swinging, charging that Douglass is not competent to oversee the city's fiscal affairs.

"Is Douglass competent?" asked Pressman before a group of people at a forum sponsored by the Mount Royal Democratic Club last Thursday. "If he can't record the papers for a $20,000 campaign, can he manage a budget of $1 billion. Based on his record he is not competent to serve as comptroller. That is the main issue of campaign."

Pressman's charge centered around the fact that Douglass failed to report fully where he got $20,000 for his previous campaign against the five term incumbent in 1975.

Those problems had been cited earlier by state election officials who told him he could not file until the overdue financial reports were submitted.

Douglass submitted those reports last Wednesday detailing $1,877.16 in debts from the previous election.

At first Douglass ignored the charges then called them "aspersions cast as a diversionary tactic to cover up the inadequacies and incompetencies of the incumbent who had be negligent in filing city audits on time."

But Pressman begged Douglass to answer the charges and Douglass said that his election committee neglected to file the later reports.

"It's that simple," he said. "There is no malintent and no effort to deceive you or to confuse you."

Pressman in turn said he was unsatisfied and would be asking the question "what ever happened to the money paid John Douglass?"

CCB special graduation for 11 Patuxent men

Eleven men received their A.A. degrees on June 19 from the Community College of Baltimore.

One man, Donald Anshel, received his second A.A. degree from CCB.

One may ask, and rightfully so, what is it about these 11 men that necessitates arranging a special graduation ceremony just for them.

The answer is simple. All 11 men are inmates of the Patuxent Institute, the maximum security prison in Jessup. (A 12th man has graduated at CCB's general graduation ceremony on June 3.

Since 1975, the Community College of Baltimore has been offering courses in four curriculum areas — Business Administration, Human Services, Arts and Sciences, and General Education — to inmates of Patuxent.

According to Martin Salisbury, director of Patuxent's Educational Services, "Four years ago, the Community College of Baltimore was the only college willing to take a risk programatically and financially by offering collegiate services to the Patuxent inmates."

Since that time CCB has organized instructional programs at several other prison centers, including the Women's Correctional Center, the Men's Camp Center, and the Baltimore City Jail.

All have proven quite successful. When the Patuxent program first began there were only 25 students. Currently there are 93. Furthermore, for the last three semesters (out of four) Patuxent students have comprised 20 percent of CCB's honors list.

Dr. Rafael L. Cortada, president of CCB, has was the keynote speaker for the June 19 graduation ceremony. Following his speech, Patuxent's Class Valedictorian, Fernando Stuart - Bey (A.A., Arts and Sciences) addressed his fellow graduates.
