Smith family reunion reveals 10 generations

By Pattie Hodges,
AFRO Staff Writer

Recently the Robert Smith family of Greenville, S.C. held its annual family reunion in that city.

212 family members gathered at the Thunderbird Hotel in Greenville for a weekend of fun, good fellowship and reminiscing. Family members came from New York, New Jersey, Maine, Baltimore and Washington, D.C.

Mrs. Beverly Douglass, administrative assistant at the mayor's Office of Promotion and Tourism of Baltimore, who is a tenth generation member of the Smith family attended, along with her husband, Fred Douglass, of Baltimore City Department of Planning, and their two children.

Mr. and Mrs. Douglass and family went by bus, chartered for the occasion by members of the Robert Smith clan from Baltimore, Washington, New Jersey, New York and Maine.

In Greenville, at the Greenville Baptist Church relatives feasted, on a sumptuous dinner, shared their love and introduced new family members attending the reunion to the older members. A very interesting highlight of the reunion was the fact that the family had traced its roots back to the slave, Phillippe, who was among those on a slave ship which came to America from the West Indies.

Phillippe was sold into slavery to the Bull family of Savannah, Ga., along with her three sons. As time passed they were resold to John Skinner Smith of South Carolina. Thus, the line of Black Smiths began, and it has continued until now; there are ten generations existing at the present time.

The Smiths worked as slaves, then as free men, sharecropping the land and finally buying much of it for themselves. They had pride in the family, believed in working hard to accumulate something in life and in the Christian ethic.

To this day, the Robert Smith family owns 50 acres of land in Greenville, the acreage of which has been established as a little town called Fountain Inn, with streets named after the various children of the Smith family.

Other features of the Smith family reunion was a tour of Robert Smith acreage and a disco, which was held at the home of Robert Smith, a descendant of the patriach, Robert Smith the First, and an uncle in the family.

Especially honored at the reunion was Mrs. Nannie Cooper Smith, great - great - great grandmother of Mrs. Beverly Douglass. Mrs. Smith is 103 years old, still strong and smokes a pipe.

Before ending the reunion, the family presented a gift of appreciation to the Greenville Baptist — a marble christening bowl.
