'Pepco grant helps put 'Blues' program on air

WETA - 26 brought the blues home on "Live From Pigfoot" — a one-hour live program featuring local blues artists in concert at Bill Harris' Northeast Washington blues and jazz club, Thursday, Jan. 17.

Joining owner-guitarist Bill Harris were John Jackson and Archie Edwards. Each sang his own style of blues accompanied by acoustic guitar.

"Live From Pigfoot" is the second WETA-produced program featuring grass roots local talent. Live music shows of this sort have been made possible at a modest price through the use of ENG cameras (mini cams), which are normally used for news gathering. WETA - 26 is the only local station using the ENG camera to cover cultural events.

"Live From Pigfoot" is made possible in part by a grant from Potomac Electric Power Company.

Harris, who will open the show with a brief history of the blues, hails from Nashville, North Carolina. He made Washington his home in the mid - forties and set about pursuing a musical career.

He studied guitar at Washington Junior College and was the first black to enter the Columbia School of Music in Washington. In 1950, Harris became the arranger and electric guitarist for The Clovers.

Harris opened the Bill Harris Guitar Studios in the late 50s. He and jazz guitarist Kenny Burrell also put together an annual end - of - the - summer guitar contest and seminar, which is culminated by their free outdoor Labor Day Fantasia sponsored by the D.C. Department of Recreation.

Four years ago, Harris opened Pigfoot, a club for jazz and blues. It's a small wonder that last year the D.C. City Council adopted Oct. 31 as "Bill Harris Pigfoot Day."

John Jackson, a native Virginian, comes by his folk - blues style of music naturally. His father played guitar and banjo and sang for house parties, his mother played the accordion and sang hymns and spirituals.

There were many local musicians, both black and white, from whom Jackson learned as he grew up. Many musicians traveling through the area stopped at the Pine Knot Inn, a local dance hall, and Jackson listened and learned from many of them.

The one person who had the most direct influence on Jackson's guitar playing was a water boy on a chain gang crew that was cutting highway 29-211 through the mountains near Jackson's home. He taught Jackson how to play guitar in "Spanish" tuning and how to use a knife handle to play slide guitar.

Archie Edwards is a typical blues singer. A D.C. Protective Police Officer by profession, Edwards performs in the tradition of Mississippi John Hurt.

Edwards first became familiar with the music of Hurt when, as a boy in Franklin County, Virginia, he learned "Candy Man" and "Stagger Lee." He vowed then and there that some day he would meet Hurt.

When he was in the service during the 40s and stationed in Mississippi, he owned the state trying to find Hurt. Many had heard of him, but no one knew where he could be found.

In 1963, Edwards was belatedly reading the Sunday paper on Thursday (he had told his wife not to throw it out, that there was something he had to read it for) when he saw that Mississippi John Hurt was performing nightly at the Ontario Place.

He went right down, met Hurt, and started performing with him. That partnership lasted three years, until Hurt went back to Mississippi.

Producer - director of "Live From Pigfoot" is Dave Deutsch; co-producer, Bill Harris; associate producer, Joan Leahy; audio, Dave Gillette and lighting, Mike Rosati.

Area student shares African experiences

By David W. Thomas

Recently, a northeast Washingtonian returned from a six month attachment on the mineral-rich continent of Africa sponsored by the United Methodist Church.

Linda L. Watts along with a fellow student, Josephine Dunbar from New York City, both of whom are seniors at Clark College in Atlanta, Ga., participated in the first program of this kind at Clark College in which they were assigned as student - teachers in their respective fields.

Watts, an aggressive and assertive young lady who attended Kelly Miller Jr. High School and H.D. Woodson Sr. High School in N.E. Washington, taught African students three classes on the Mindolo campus in Kitwe, Zambia.

Dunbar was located in Lusaka, Zambia's capital, and performed religious radio programs for Multi-Medal Zambia, an affiliate of the UMC.

Nearly all of Watts' students were already in communications, specifically journalism, thus she learned as much as she taught.

"I was teaching journalism from a black American perspective," revealed Watts. "It was a sharing experience with African students, everything I experienced in journalism I shared with them."

The remaining two classes Watts taught were more or less related to communications and she further stated that she and Dunbar were also history teachers.

"Not only did Josie and I teach mass communications," says Watts. "But we were also history teachers, informing Africans on the nature of black Americans."

More interesting, is that Watts did not limit her talents to the confines of the program. Being the inquisitive journalist that she is, she contributed stories to the National Mirror, the publication of the UMC, and volunteered her services to the Times of Zambia, a widely read daily newspaper.

"Most of my articles were on refugees," disclosed Watts. "I found it very hard not to become politically involved in this area." Furthermore, she said the trip compelled her to learn more about the ramifications of politics and to increase her skills in shorthand and in aggressiveness in order to sharpen her overall journalistic talents.

Rolark gets award from Labor Council

By Vincent Taylor

Last week's Greater Washington Central Labor Council 1980 Awards Dinner - Dance was not just a party. A sense of seriousness ran through the event, held in the Washington Hilton Hotel. Approximately 300 people attended the $30-a-plate dinner.

Labor leader George Meany had died and the dinner's guest speaker, Robert Georgine, president of the Building and Construction Trade Department of the AFL-CIO had some disturbing words to say about what he perceived as "attacks" on the labor movement.

First acknowledging Meany's death, Georgine said, "George Meany — on Jan. 10, 1979 . . . got his card in the plumber's union. On Jan. 10, 1980 (the date of Meany's death) he gave it up."

Georgine claimed that unions are "under siege" from "all sides." He said that union busting is a "major new industry."

Georgine said that to strengthen the labor movement, an alliance must be formed between the movement and consumer groups, senior citizens, women and blacks. Such groups, he said, "feel the sometimes painful economic clout of big business."

Georgiane claimed that a proposed worker's compensation bill sponsored by City Councilmember Willie Hardy "attempts to emasculate" workers compensation for employees in the District.

Although several members of the city council attended the dinner, Hardy was not one of them.
