Coppin awarded Peace Corps assistantship

The Peace Corps has awarded $6,000 to Coppin State College to increase student awareness of Peace Corps opportunities and to provide an undergraduage student assistantship to a student who will coordinate the program's activities on campus.

Miss Lynn Fogg, a junior at Coppin, who has been selected by the college to receive the undergraduate assistantship, will work along with the school's Placement Office and with full-time Peace Corps recruiters in organizing recruiting activities on campus and in making Peace Corps information available to students, faculty and community residents interested in international experience.

The project is part of a demonstration program being conducted this year in 31 southeastern colleges and universities and 2 community organizations to increase minority participation in the Peace Corps and to improve recruitment in highly competitive occupational skills areas.

The Peace Corps presently has more than 6,500 volunteers serving in 58 developing nations in Africa, the Near East, Asia, the Pacific, South and Central America and the Carribean. Volunteers are working in a variety of assignments ranging from argiculture and health to education.

Served in 3 branches

Baltimorean is experienced U. S. military man

Karl L. Williams, a Navy crewman aboard the amphibious assault ship USS Guam, has a great deal of experience in the U.S. military.

He has served in the Marine Corps and the Army and says he will also serve in the Coast Guard before he brings his military career to an end.

"Switching services has broken up the monotony of serving an entire military career in one service, says the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph A. Williams of 3905 N. Rogers Ave., Baltimore. "I've served almost 16 years in the military and it seems like just yesterday I began my career."

A 1964 graduate of the Baltimore City Preparatory College, Williams' military career has taken him from Vietnam to Berlin. Today, his career has him visiting countries throughout the southern Europe.

Williams, "Smokey" to his shipmates, seldom talks about his military experiences and dismisses any suggestion that his collection of more than one dozen decorations and battle awards might classify him as an unsung hero.

"Sure, I've got a lot of ribbons and medals," he says.

"But that's just because I've done what I was supposed to do."

Williams wears three Bronze Stars, six Purple Hearts, two Army Commendation Medals and an Air Medal for valor among his decorations.

Aboard the USS Guam, operating with the U.S. Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean Sea, Williams, 33, serves as a ship's serviceman.

"I run the ship's laundry and dry cleaning plant," he explains. "It's a lot like running a civilian laundry service. The only difference is that I have military people working for me and I cater only to Marine Corps and Navy personnel aboard the Guam."

While Williams' position as petty officer in charge of the Guam's laundry and dry cleaning services lacks the luster of his duties as an Army infantryman or Marine Corps artillery sergeant, he says he feels the job is an important one.

"It's important to me to know I'm doing the best for whoever I work for, no matter what that job is."

Williams adds that his experience aboard the USS Guam may be useful to him one day when his military career comes to an end.

"My father has talked about opening a dry cleaning and laundry service back in Baltimore when I leave the military," says Williams. "The job I'm doing aboard the Guam is good experience for the day that happens."

He joined the Army shortly after graduating from high school, "because I wanted to do something different and because my father and older brother had served in the Army," Williams said.

"I joined the Marines three months after I left the Army in 1972. I missed the military and decided to join the Marines because I heard it was a tough organization.

"After I'd served five and a half years with the Marines, and made eight trips to the Mediterranean, I decided to join the Navy and do some more traveling."

Williams joined the Navy in May 1977, five months after leaving the Marine Corps. He attended specialized training as a Navy ship's serviceman and then reported to the USS Guam in September 1977.

Williams says although he likes to travel, since he joined the Navy, he does not like the separation from his wife, the former Ada Louise Bell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Bell of Route 32, Clarksville, Md., and their three children.

Williams credits his family with his success in the military.

"They have given me the support I've needed every time I've decided to change my branch of service or continue my military career. They're all understanding and the only regret I have about my career is that I can't have them with me while I'm traveling."

Williams says he will probably remain on board the USS Guam until his present enlistment with the Navy expires in 1981. Then, he says he will try to cross over to the Coast Guard.

"I'll retire from the military one of these days," he says with a smile. "I'm in good shape, physically and mentally, so I plan to stay around a little while longer. Then maybe I'll end my military career and go back to Baltimore and open that laundry and dry cleaning business with my father."

Children's dental tests set

In observance of "National Children's Dental Health Week" the dental clinic at St. Agnes Hospital has planned free oral screenings for children, Thursday morning, Feb. 7 from 8:30 a.m. to noon.

Dentists will examine children's mouths and teeth and advise parents of what dental care their children may need.

The clinic will also be presenting a series of Walt Disney films and dental hygienists will be holding a "Brush-In" to teach children the proper methods of dental care.

The St. Agnes Dental Clinic is located in the Residence Building adjacent to the main hospital complex at Wilkens and Caton Avenues.

For more information, call the Dental Clinic at 368-7691.

Lutheran Hospital of Maryland recently received a check from its auxiliary for $10,000, which goes toward a pledge of $200,000. The check was presented to Lutheran's President John P. McDaniel.

Auxiliary funds have helped make it possible for Lutheran to expand its services.
