Maybe brew at Zoo, too

Beer prices increase at Memorial Stadium

Beer prices at Memorial Stadium — the home of the Baltimore Orioles — have increased 13 to 25 percent this season and thirsty fans are angry that they are paying some of the highest prices in the American League.

It was reported, Thursday that the price of a 12-ounce cup of beer was increased from $1.10 to $1.25 at the start of this year's season.

Oriole fans pay higher beer prices than patrons of Boston's Fenway Park or New York's Yankee Stadium. The cost of living in both cities is significantly higher than in Baltimore.

"I think its robbery without a gun," one fan said.

Red Sox fans pay 95 cents for a 12-ounce cup of beer and Yankee fans pay $1.25 for 16 ounces.

More news about brew.

The Board of Recreations and Parks has approved the sale of beer at the city Zoo and the liquor board is expected to follow suit and grant a liquor license.

James W. Hundley, III, executive director of the Baltimore Zoological Society, said the decision could result in increased profits that may lead to improvements in Zoo facilities.

"Beer has become an important part of the daytime recreational family experience for Baltimore adults," Hundley said, "Our profits will go back into the zoo."

City crime decreases

For the first time in two years, the number of serious crimes in Baltimore decreased the first three months of 1980, according to a report released by the Police Department.

Murder, rape, robbery and aggravated assault, decreased 15.5 percent, while property crimes burglary, larceny and auto theft was decreased [illegible] percent. Commissioner Donald Pomerleau said the number of serious crimes in the first quarter was down 4.4 percent from the same period in 1979. Murder was the biggest decrease in the number of crimes. There were only 50 murders committed the first three months of 1980 compared with a 71 in '79.

Pomerleau said the crime reduction was a positive reflection on the productivity of the men and women of the Police Department.

Orlinsky wants City Charter revised

City Council President Walter Orlinsky has suggested a committee be formed to revise the City Charter, which he said is outmoded and creates an enormous amount of red tape.

Orlinsky made the suggestion at the Board of Estimates meeting Wednesday, in response to a series of published reports detailing the maneuvers used by city officials to bypass provisions of the Charter.

"The Charter is not capable of dealing with the realities of contemporary life," Orlinsky said. "We cannot continue like this.

"He said it should be amended so "we won't continually have to find ways of circumventing the Charter."

Drug Arrests

Eight present or former employees of the Springfield State Hospital and five other persons were arrested Thursday on a variety of drug charges.

State police spokesman Dan McCarthy said the arrests followed a lengthy undercover operation that began when police assigned to the hospital reported habitual drug use by employees.

McCarthy said the defendants are not charged with distributing drugs to patients at the mental hospital.

The 11 men and two women were variously charged with possession and distribution of LSD, marijuana, hashish and metaphetamines.

POMERLEAU

Mayor William Donald Schaefer has proposed legislation that would allow Police Commissioner Donald Pomerleau to continue in his post after he reaches the mandatory retirement age of 65.

Pomerleau, 64, has headed the Police Department since 1966 and was appointed to his third six-year term in November 1978, which ends in 1984, three years after his 65th birthday.

Bleaker future predicted for home building industry

Housing contractors, already discouraged by bad news about rising mortgage interest rates and a drop in the number of home starts, may face an even bleaker future.

An industry spokesman said this week that high interest rates could cause the home building industry to collapse, causing "one hell of a mess."

Robert Brown, executive vice president of the Maryland Home Builders Association, said that unless interest rates decrease soon, it may be impossible for the industry to recover from recent losses.

"If interest rates stay at 15 to 20 percent for the next five to six months, there won't be any business to start up later," he said. "We're going to have one hell of a mess, the likes of which this country has never seen."

Robert Sheehan, an economist for the National Association of Home Builders, agreed.

"This is the worst year for the housing industry since World War II," he said. "The housing industry can almost be described in depressionary rather than recessionary terms."

Only 10,000 housing starts are expected in the city and five nearby counties this year, Brown said. He said he could not remember a year when the number of housing starts was expected to be so low.

Last month's home sales in the Baltimore area were 30 percent lower than normal, even though prices were only 2.5 percent higher than last year and have dropped since February, realtors said.

Statistics gathered by federally-insured lenders show the average price of a new home purchased in the Baltimore area in March was $81,700, compared to $83,200 in the previous month.

Brown also said he is worried because only 372 building permits were issued in the area in February, a month in which an average 860 permits have been issued during the past 10 years.
