Man on hospital roof talked to safety

Hecklers in crowd jeer would-be suicide

By James M. Abraham
AFRO Staff Writer

Along the 800 block Linden Avenue, passers-by craned their necks to gaze at the skinny white man sitting on a fifth-floor window ledge of Maryland General.

"Jump man, jump," cried out one woman as she shifted uncomfortably from one foot to another.

Meanwhile, up above, the man smoked a cigarette and looked speculatively at the five-story drop beneath him.

On the ground, firemen were busy rushing to and fro. Several of them stood beneath a hand net, the kind that looks like a trampoline, while others hurried to set up a larger net.

"He ain't goin' to jump," hollered a fat, middle-aged white man with a pot belly. "All he wants is some publicity."

Members of the SWAT team began showing up, and, a few moments later, someone turned on a spotlight which focused on the hapless man.

"They need to push him," said a girl. "That's what I would do!"

"Where's the man who's going to jump?" asked a latecomer.

The SWAT team began roping off the area, forcing many gawkers to leave the scene. As they did, one woman angrily protested. "I paid my money to get down here, why can't I stay and watch him jump?"

According to Clark Jeunette, public relations officer for the hospital, the man was finally talked into leaving the window by a male nurse trained in psychiatric services.

Jeunette said the man had admitted himself to the hospital's psychiatric ward earlier in the week and had climbed out onto the window ledge after refusing to attend a voluntary group therapy session. He was on the window ledge from 7:45 to 9 p.m.

Large crab harvest good news for consumers, bad for watermen

An unexpected large harvest of carbs has proved to be a boon for consumers but a bust for Chesapeake Bay watermen, statistics indicate.

Watermen said last week the supply of crabs this summer far exceeds the demands, forcing prices down dramatically from last year and causing some crabbers to stop work entirely for days at a time.

The National Marine Fishery Service said more than 15 million crabs had been caught through May, slightly more than the total for last year. But on the marketplace, the only figures that count for crabbers, watermen are getting clobbered.

A bushel of prime crabs, those measuring at least six inches across the shell averaged $15 two weeks ago on the Upper Eastern Shore, down from $35 a bushel a year ago. Smaller crabs are going for as low as $6 a bushel.

The price for prime crabs has gone up slightly since then, as high as $25 a bushel in Queenstown. But carbbers said as soon as the volume gets high enough again, the price will again drop.

Jim Jores of Grasonville and Pete Burch of Queenstown are among the watermen who figure their time is better spent on shore than harvesting crabs for low prices.

"I had to take the day off. I was called by my packer, and he said he's going to lay off a day," Jones said. "I'd rather him do that than cut the price and cheat the crabber."

Burch, meanwhile, spent time repairing his engine rather than out into the Bay. "You just about have to give them away," he said.

Will Jordan deliver keynote speech?

A question for the morbidly curious

Will Vernon Jordan deliver the keynote address to the annual National Urban League Conference?

That's the question that lures a record - breaking number of registrants to the NUL's yearly meeting that will be held in New York City beginning Sunday, Aug. 3.

The interest borders on morbid curiosity. It has been heightened by the reports that Jordan, who is recuperating from gunshot wounds, is determined to deliver the 1980 keynote message, even if he has to be wheeled in.

According to an Urban League official, the chances are about even, but "we'll cross that bridge when we get to it."

If Jordan appears it will be one of the most dramatic moments in the history of the organization that was founded 72 years ago.

The Fort Wayne shooting of Jordan shocked the nation. When it appeared that Jordan would survive the cowardly attack, the incident spawned some of the juicest and choicest gossip since that nationally - known Presidential campaigner found himself in a fatal bridge affair.

An added touch for the weird set, that gets "turned on" by the misfortunes of others, are the rash of feature stories that are being published about Vernon's wife She has been confined to the wheel chair by multiple sclerosis, a condition that is not of recent vintage.

As we, in the media, like to proclaim, we don't make the news, we merely report it. That is, of course, an incomplete statement. We report it, when it is felt that readers will gobble it up.

The "we" refers to the editors whose determination on what makes or doesn't make news hinges on their ability to anticipate the taste of the buying public.

If Jordan is able to deliver the NUL keynote address, his words will be carried by most of the newspapers and the networks.

Last year, Jordan delivered the 1979 keynote NUL speech, and it was treated routinely by the journals outside of Chicago.

Vernon Jordan

If he delivered the same speech in New York without changing a single word of his 1979 address, not only will it get wide publication but the same audience will applaud him more vociferously. In doing so, they will claim that it was the best speech he ever gave.

And factually, what else can he say differently than in 1979. Inflation, unemployment, welfare, housing, the political scene remain elements of the same degree of concern in 1980.

As for the general format of the NUL conference, it will be the same. The producers of the annual meeting are real professionals.

They produce an excellent forum on social problems. Whether it is a discussion of educational trends, welfare problems, city planning, political issues, affirmative action, social work opportunities and related subjects, the league's sessions are led by some of the best informed specialists.

Although, the league has been holding these annual fests since 1910, it wasn't until the days of Whitney Young as executive director, that the organization began to lure thousands instead of hundreds to annual meetings.

As the black activists became popular in the late 60s and daturbances spread through the inner cities, black moderates answered Whitney Young's plea to become more involved in the ghetto with social projects.

In 1969, it was in New Orleans, that Young led the national convention delegates into that city's inner city institutions for meetings and the involvement of neighborhood leaders away from the plush downtown convention - hall setting.

Following the New Orleans meeting, the 1970 New York Conference took some of its programs up to Harlem. Unfortunately, transportation became a problem and the Harlem sessions were somewhat of a disaster.

In March, 1971, Young died of a heart attack while on an African trip.

Jordan inherited the successful efforts of Young League meetings could have been held in a telephone booth during Young's early years.

Not only has the annual attendance held up, but the job itself has become very rewarding. Eugene Kinkle Jones and Lester Granger, earlier urban league executives, never dreamt the day would come when persons occupying the executive's chair could break the six - figure salary barrier.

According to stories concerning Jordan's current financial opportunities, he turned down presidential cabinet offers that pay about $60,000 a year plus perks, because he would be losing money.

Jordan not only is on the league payroll, but does a radio network commentary, writes a syndicated column and is on a number of corporate boards that issues sizeable checks for attendance.

So in addition to the drama that rides with Jordan's vow to address this year's meeting, his future ability to lead the league is at stake.

Heading the National Urban League is the most prestigious of the black civil rights organization jobs. Because of its affiliation with the Red Feather or United Fund organizations around the nation, the league is strongly supported by corporate America.

When Young headed the league, the publisher of Time Magazine was board chairman. As a result, Young made the Time cover.

The Westinghouse executive, Donald McGannon, served as NUL board chairman while Jordan has been leading the League fortunes. He is not a bad man to have in your corner.

So, is it any wonder that there is speculation, concern, anxiety over the health of Jordan.

It's much like the wealthy man who is surrounded by a bevy of beautiful women. He should be happy, but he isn't. Because he is perplexed over whether they are attracted by his physique or his wealth?

In Billy Carter case

McCree to review evidence on Civiletti

By Miles White

U.S. Solicitor General Wade H. McCree, the fourth highest ranking official in the Department of Justice—and the highest ranking black—has been selected to decide whether or not Attorney General Benjamin R. Civiletti should be reprimanded for possible improprieties in the handling of the Billy Carter case.

McCree, who represents the United States in cases filed against it before the supreme Court, will receive and review findings by the Justice Department's Office of Professional Responsibility (OPR) determining if the attorney general, in talking about the case with President Carter, may have hampered an ongoing investigation that could have led to criminal charges against the president's brother.

The investigation was triggered by statements made by Civiletti on last Saturday admitting that he had in fact discussed the case with President Carter, although the White House, and the attorney general, had previously denied that there had been any mutual discussion of Billy Carter's dealings with the Libyan government.

The revelation by Civiletti has opened him up to possible charges of official irresponsibility and obstruction of justice by discussing the case with the president, who later urged Billy to register as an agent of Libya after he admitted accepting $220,000 from the Arab country.

McCree said through a spokesperson on Monday that he could not say what course he would follow in the matter until something is filed with him, but that he would review the report and take the "appropriate action" at that time.

According to Title 28 of the Code of Federal Regulations, the Office of Professional Responsibility, a watchdog unit for the Justice Department, is headed by a special counsel under the direction of the attorney general.

Under the regulations, the counsel receives and reviews information or allegations of misconduct or rule violations by department officials. A report is then made to the attorney general determining whether or not an official has acted improperly, but it is left up to the attorney general to decide what actions, if any, should be taken against the official.

But since Civiletti himself is under investigation, the responsibility to review the report falls to the next highest official on the chain of command.

Ordinarily that individual would be Assistant Attorney General Charles B. Renfrew, but since Renfrew took part in the deliberations in the case, the responsibility was handed to McCree, who is spokesman at the department said was "the highest Justice Department official with no part" in the Billy Carter case.

The spokesman, Tom Stewart, said it was not sure how long the investigation might take, but added that McCree has a great deal of leeway in deciding what action to take against Civiletti, which he said could be anything from a federal grand jury investigation to nothing.

He has a tremendous amount of territory within which to work, Stewart said, but added that McCree could not "substitute his judgement" in place of the OPR findings.

McCree's role then, Stewart said, will be strictly limited to "what to do about any findings of misconduct, and he cannot make any further determinations on whether or not Civiletti has acted improperly. Stewart also said that McCree's decision on what to do with the findings cannot be challenged by another department official, but is final.

However, it has been learned that the code of regulations empowering the OPR, was update last April to give the associate attorney general authority to review investigations, and placing him on an even keel with the solicitor general.

The report on the Civiletti probe then, could have been set to go to either McCree or to Associate Attorney General John H. Shenefield.

Michael E. Shaheen Jr., who heads the Office of Professional Responsibility, would not return a reporter's calls to respond to why McCree was chosen to review the report rather than Shenefield, who, as a practical matter, actually outranks McCree's position in the department, making him the third highest official at Justice.

Shaheen has said that President Carter as well as Civiletti will probably be interviewed to determine if a June 17 exchange between the two may have headed off criminal charges being brought against Billy Carter, who last week registered as an agent of the Libyan government after being under investigation by the Justice Department for several months.

EEOC celebrates 15th anniversary

The U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) is observing the 15th anniversary of the agency established by the Civil Rights Act of 1964 in a commemoration planned for Thursday (July 31) at 10 a.m. at the Dean Acheson Auditorium, Department of State, 2201 C St., N.W. (23rd Street entrance).

The EEOC will honor Clarence Mitchell, chair of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, who last month received the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the nation's highest civilian award from President Carter, and in 1969 the Spingarn Medal from the NAACP, which he served for 32 years as director of the Washington Bureau.

Mitchell is one of the central figures in the history of the modern civil rights movement. He played a central role in the development and enactment of the key civil rights laws of this period, of which the 1964 Civil Rights Act and the establishment of the EEOC are among the most prominent.

The anniversary comes at a time when the EEOC has completed a major reorganization, a restructuring of its field offices and a comprehensive reform of all its operating procedures.

Partly as a consequence of these recent accomplishments, new authorities and jurisdictions have been transferred to the EEOC under President Carter's civil rights reorganization.

The plan greatly enhances the authority of EEOC as the federal government's comprehensive equal employment agency, fulfilling a long sought goal of civil rights advocates.

EEOC Chair Eleanor Holmes Norton said that notable among significant milestones in commission improvements are:

The first permanent backlog reduction in commission history, reduced 60 percent with total case backlog elimination expected in 1982.

Case resolution on an average of three months, compared with two years under the old procedures.

A remedy rate up from 14 to 32 percent for new charges.

Monetary benefits up from $1,400 to $3,670 per person.

A new systemic class action charge processing system with 500 class charges filed in the first 18 months.

An increase from 32 to 49 fully staffed district and area offices, providing charging parties and respondents with easy access to case processing.

In addition, the President's Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1978 approved by Congress in May 1978 transferred new jurisdictions to EEOC, increasing its responsibility to administration of three rather than only one statue.

It now enforces the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, the Equal Pay Act and, in the federal sector, Affirmative Action Planning, Title VII complaint processing and appeals, and handicap discrimination.

The period of structural and operational reform has also been characterized by the most prolific outpouring of policy initiatives in the commission's history.

Among them are several of major proportion, including Affirmative Action Guidelines, which protect employers who follow the guidelines against "reverse discrimination" liability; revised Uniform Guidelines on Employee Selection, the basic document in the field; Pregnancy Discrimination Guidelines.

Chair Norton said, "We are using the 15th anniversary of the EEOC to remind ourselves and the public of the important of civil rights enforcement not only in the past but in the years ahead.

"We are very pleased that Mr. Mitchell, whose contributions are written in every piece of civil rights legislation during the past quarter century, will be with us to commemorate this occasion."

The EEOC is responsible for enforcing Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, which prohibits employment discrimination based on race, sex, color, religion or national origin; the Age Discrimination in Employment Act; the Equal Pay Act; and in the federal sector only, the prohibitions against discrimination because of handicap.

Blacks and the GOP

Reagan's campaign contributors read like "Who's Who in Corporate America". The recent Washington Post report shows that the Republican Party is largely composed of rich white folks.

Its convention delegates consisted of 43 percent of thise in the above $50,000 bracket, 29 percent $30,000 to $50,000, 2 percent below $12,000.

Only 2 perrent of the delegates were black, and there was no black on the platform committee. Women comprised 30 percent of the delegates.

The conservative element of the party prevailed in the platform.

It struck down the party's 40-year Equal Rights Amendment support as well as its previous endorsement of voting rights for the District of Columbia.

The military plank calls for a minimum of a $15 billion increase for the first year which will most likely into full implementation run around $25 or $40 billion, when they have produced all the weapons called for in the platform.

The platform calls for across the board income tax reduction from a 14 to 70 range to a range of 10 to 30 percent.

It asks removal of all regulations of gas and oil, removal of the 55 mile speed limit, cut back on federal government regulations and return more poser to the states.

Conrail charged with discrimination

By Roger Glass

Employee charges that the Consolidated Rail Corporation (Conrail) has been guilty of "fostering inadequate, discriminatory practices" in its engineer training program were the subject of discussions on Capitol Hill this week.

The roundtable discussions, part of a Congressional Black Caucus inquiry, was called by Representatives Parren J. Mitchell, Walter E. Fauntroy and William H. Gray III who allege that "there is substantial evidence to indicate that Conrail has willfully sought to exclude blacks from its more prestigious and better paid positions.
