The honorees are being recognized for their many outstanding contributions in community services.

Included on the program are Rep. Marjorie Holt, R-Md. who will serve as the guest speaker for the affair and Maryland State Senator Aris T. Allen, R-20th, who is the toastmaster for the program.

Aileen Talley

Joyce P. McManus

Eloise Richardson's career in Maryland began in Annapolis when she became the first black member of the staff of the Anne Arundel County Library System, serving as children's librarian prior to integration in the public schools.

After serving in this capacity for 12 years, she became the librarian of Crownsville Hospital Center, filling a great need to aid in the rehabilitation of patients at the hospital.

In 1963 she set up the library for patients, completing this task in February 1963. She decided to make the library program therapeutic for patients. Through research of professional worth from the National Library of Medicine, she established a program entitled Bibliotherapy.

Out of this program she developed into a specialist using poetry as a means of therapy for the benefit of the patients. In further study, she participated in workshops on the national level and on programs which led her to be active in the professional organization, the Association of Poetry Therapy of New York State and earned a certification in poetry therapy.

Her work has carried her to a number of nearby institutions for talks and demonstrations including a guidance class at Johns Hopkins University in 1975, an Institute for Librarians Working with Disadvantaged People at the University in 1971, an abnormal psyhcology class at the Anne Arundel County Community College in 1977 and several high school English classes.

"Don't complain about it, fix it" is a point of view that has kept Aileen W. Talley among the busier citizens of Annapolis and Anne Arundel County for more than 10 years.

Mrs. Talley measures success in terms of a filled pothole, fresh paint striping a road, a park replacing a junk yard or a group of savvy citizens speaking up for well planned, orderly growth.

In a variety of volunteer activities she has tried to work with neighbors and local officials to improve life in Anne Arundel both in immediate ways such as road repair and the location of fast food restaurants to more fundamental efforts such as the development of laws and programs to prevent problems before they occur.

As chairman of the Annapolis Neck Peninsula Federation she has worked with area residents to build effective advocacy for orderly development and improved public facilities.

During her term as president of the Severn Town Club she helped guide that organization's many successful civic programs. She is the first woman to receive the Annapolis Jaycees' Outstanding Young Annapolitan Award.

Joyce P. McManus, at a very age, discovered she was a musically talented youngster and decided to pursue her studies in the music field. At five she began her piano lessons.

Later she was a church organizer, choir director and was an accompanist for aglee club at the age of 13. She received superior ratings in piano and voice at state festivals on college campuses in North Carolina where she is originally from.

She later earned her bachelor's and master's degrees and did further study in music by training under Robert Jochins of Germany, Madam Dushalk of Austria and under Madam Pinell, voice instructor at Syracuse University, Syracuse, N.Y.

Mrs. McManus has been appointed by the Anne Arundel County Board of Education in other educational experiences. They include Committee for interviewing administrators, advisory board to the music supervisor, curriculum guide committee for both junior and senior high school, curriculum guide K-12, classroom demonstration for teaching music in junior high and resource teacher for student-teacher training.

She was the first black to be appointed to the Fine Arts Festival Board of Directors. During her three years as a board member she organized the Youth Choral Workshop which consisted of 100 youngsters from all parts of Maryland, Virginia, Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia.
