Latest developments in Glenview-Parkington squabble

"A lot has taken place since the tenants of the Glenview - Parkington Apartments decided to take on their landlord, Lyon Miller, almost a month ago, and in the latest action, a tenant who had previously been declared a non-tenant by Miller had his status as a resident verified by a district court judge.

Ross Taber, president of the Glenview-Parkington Tenant's Association, had refused to sign his lease when he moved into his Parkington apartment in April because he claimed that Miller had failed to make a series of specified repairs to the facility.

After repeated exchanges with Miller, Taber helped organize the tenant's group, and became a vocal leader of that group, despite allegations by Miller that, since he did not sign a lease, he was not a tenant.

But Judge Joseph Ciotola ruled Thursday, Aug. 21 that Taber was indeed a tenant, and also found Miller guilty of illegally disconnecting Taber's gas.

Tenants say that the disconnection of utilities is a common tactic of retaliation by Miller.

Miller has also come under fire from the Glen Improvement Association, a community group, and the city's housing authority. He has recently made the list of the ten worst landlords in the city, a compilation released by the housing authority based on conditions in the rental units.

Miles refused comment on advise of his lawyer.

DANGEROUS ELECTRICAL WORK — Exposed wires and shoddy utility hookups leave this utility room prone to fire and invasion by rodents, say tenants at the Glenview Apartments.

BULGING STORAGE AREA — John Fedeece, Geneva Harvey, and Robert Hill (L to R) look at a ramshackle garbage container erected by their landlord. They say its construction leaves it open to rats and small animals.

DILAPIDATED APARTMENT — Geneva Harvey stands in one of the basement apartments which was left vacant and open since a tropical storm ruined them over a year ago.

Coast guard finds 300 pounds of hashish in ocean

OCEAN CITY, Md. — The Coast Guard says $2 million worth of hashish found floating in the Atlantic Ocean may have been the cargo of a boat purposely scuttled by smugglers to divert law enforcement from a larger cache.

More than 300 pounds of the drug have been found in ocean waters off Maryland's Eastern Shore. Ships and airplanes Tuesday searched a 1,600-square mile area of water near Ocean City for the wreckage of a boat officials said they were convinced had broken up in the open sea.

The Coast Guard Sunday found wooden fragments, life jackets and deck chairs alongside rubber bags containing 170 pounds of hashish about six to eight miles east of Ocean City, Lt. Commander Tom Booth said.

Searchers found more debris and an inflated life raft Monday, prompting the coast guard to continue the search, Booth said. Booth, the head of the Coast Guard's Eastern Shore operations, said it is possible the debris was a decoy to keep law enforcement authorities away from a much larger drug shipment.

"I'm convinced that a boat was broken up. Whether the boat that broke up was a decoy, I don't know,"h: said at a news conference.

He said authorities have not determined what caused the wreck, but said it could have been an explosion or a collision with a larger ship.

"The breakup (of the boat) was traumatic, either an explosion from gasoline fumes in the bilge, or I don't know what. We had three or four days of heavy weather, and a freighter could have hit a 40-footer without knowing it," Booth said.

Booth said fragments of the boat — none larger than five feet long — indicate the boat was between 40 feet and 50 feet long.

Authorities displayed the 170 pounds of hashish found at the news conference, but would not disclose the total amount of drugs found. "I'm not going to be specific. But we're talking about more than $2 million worth," Booth said.

Coast Guard officials consider Maryland's Eastern Shore an ideal place for smugglers to unload illegal drugs because of the uneven coastline and the larger number of inlets and coves.

Voter Education Fund receives grant

Informing the public on the issues and questions of equity in the funding of public education in Maryland will be the focus of a special project of the Maryland Voters Education Fund of the League of Women Voters of Maryland.

The project is being funded through an $18,000 grant from the Education Finance Reform Project of the League of Women Voters Education Fund. Similar grants have been awarded to leagues in Oklahoma and Mississippi.

Plans include a workshop which will be held on September 27 to train speakers who will then be available to talk to community groups throughout the state.

A slide presentation on school finance is being developed. Groups are invited to request the slide presentation and a speaker for meetings after October 1 by calling or writing the project director, Lois Hybl, 4107 Westview Rd., Baltimore 21218, 301 - 243 - 1710.

Information presented will emphasize Maryland's constitutional requirement for "a thorough and efficient system of free public schools," the need for fairness to all of Maryland's children and taxpayers, education's importance to economic and social development of the state, and information on Maryland's system of paying for schools, cost - of - education indices, the special needs of different kinds of students, municipal overburden, and the effects of tax and spending limits on school finance.

Understanding these issues is particularly important at this time. Caroline, Somerset, and St. Mary's Counties and Baltimore City have filed a suit, Somerset County Board of Education et al. v. David W. Hornbeck et. al., challenging the constitutionality of Maryland's system of funding public education.

Montgomery County has intervened on the side of the state as a defendant. The trial is scheduled to begin September 16.

Citizens should also have the background necessary to participate in legislative activity affecting school finance.

The Education Subcommittee of the Task Force to Study State - Local Fiscal Relationships is considering recommendations for community college funding, vocational - technical education, and a new formula for special education aid.

A cost - of - education study is being conducted to determine differences in costs for the same services in different districts. Spending limits will continue to be a hotly debated issue.

Gov. Hughes appointed to education board

Gov. Harry Hughes has been appointed to the Executive Committee of the Southern Regional Education Board, the operating agency of the nation's first interstate compact for higher education.

Appointments to the 18 - member executive committee were made this year by the board chairman, Gov. D. Robert Graham of Florida, with the approval of the governors of the 14 SREB states.

The executive committee is responsible for directing special studies, policy implementation, and budgeting procedure analyses for the SREB which provides its 14 member states with comparative facts on education by publishing special surveys, fact sheets, and pamphlets. The board addresses critical problems such as enrollment declines and institutional retrenchment.

It also studies and reports on the efforts of higher education boards in the region, examines teacher education and certification, and forms general education policy recommendations for Southern states.

"I have made education one of this administration's priorotities," the governor said, "and I hope that involvement with the SREB Executive Committee will provide a unique opportunity for Maryland to assume a more active role in educational leadership."

Unemployment benefits extended

Unemployment benefits for 5,000 Maryland residents have been extended 13 weeks, the first such extension since January 1978, a state official said Tuesday.

Marilyn Corbett, spokesman for the Department of Human Resources, said the state is notifying those affected by the extension to reapply for benefits. She said the extension will cost about $500,000 a week.

Workshop set on divorce

"Legal Problems in Separation and Divorce" is offered monthly at the Center for Displaced Homemakers, 2435 Maryland Avenue.
