One finding of the report that all sides can agree on is the desires of county residents for improved public transportation to and from the city.

The report points out that a quarter of all residents in Baltimore County interviewed, regardless of whether they were new to the area or previous residents, agreed that there was a specific need for increased municipal services and transportation.

Besides dismissing the idea that there is a nation-wide conspiracy to force blacks out of the city, the report goes further to point out that "if one looks for evidence of a theory that there is a national conspiracy to manipulate poor people out the cities, one finds rather more evidence for a conspiracy that prevents poor people from living in particular neighborhoods outside the cities."

jury I would rather go to jail than pay the fine."

The defendants who included two Philadelphians, Henry DeBernardo and Charles Burris; and Adrian Brown, Yolanda Brown, Virginia Price, William Greene and Charles Allen were represented by P.M. Smith, and William Murphy.

The two attorney donated their services to the defendants; and the trial was by Murphy's insistence that what was at stake was the constitutionality of the actions of the police to limit the free speech of the demonstrators.

"We knew we were going to beat it," said DeBernardo. "It was a phony charge. They knew that the Inner Harbor was a hot spot, and the judge...was out to set an example. But Billy Murphy successfully argued that you can't set examples like that. Besides, the state failed to prove that an actual order to disperse was issued."

Five additional protesters, who were found guilty of similar charges a month ago, have filed for an appeal, but no trial date has been set.

Eastsiders picket Oriental's store after fracas with youth

By James M. Alexander
AFRO Staff Writer

A young Korean, who believed that he had spotted a youth who had assaulted his father earlier in the week, took the youth and his daughter hostage on Labor Day, and refused to release them until police arrived.

According to Vivian Rhames, the mother of the black youth, the Korean apparently thought her son was involved in an incident which occurred during the past weekend.

"He chased out of the store," she said, "and took my son and granddaughter at gunpoint. He forced them up the street and into the store, and when police came he told them he was making a citizen's arrest."

Mrs. Rhames said that the Korean kicked and slapped her son several times in an attempt to make him tell what he knew of the previous assault on his father.

"My son said that he was trying to get some information out of him about his father's assault," she said.

The residents of the community also organized a picket line Wednesday in front of the store, located in the 2000 block east North Ave. and, after several hours of being picketed, the store owner, Young Chun, was asked by city police to close his store. He complied.

Capt. John MacGillivary, of the Eastern Police District's Community Relations Division, told the AFRO Thursday that the situation has cooled down since Wednesday.

"What we have is an Oriental business which has had some friction with juveniles in the area. We had an assault on the owner. What occurred after that was that the owner's son, who thought he had recognized one of the individuals who had attacked his father, grabbed him and allegedly pointed a weapon at him in order to hold him for the police. This obviously created some problems," he said.

MacGillivary said that he and officers from the Eastern District have talked with all the parties involved, and added that he was optimistic that "the problems will be resolved.

"What we have here is two situations that have to be resolved through the courts," he explained. "We explained to the owner of the store what his rights are, but we also explained that there were certain limitations to what he could do personally."

MacGillivary added that he had also spoken with several local community leaders, and that all have expressed a desire to work toward a better understanding with the store owner.

Min Chan, was charged with assault by pointing a pistol and released Wednesday on his own recognizance.

Congress members get good ratings

WASHINGTON — Votes against the Panama Canal treaty and federal funding for abortions have won 100 percent ratings from a group called Conservatives Against Legislation for two House of Representatives members from Maryland.

Rep. Robert Bauman, R - Md. and Rep. Marjorie Holt, R - Md., were among 42 members of Congress who received perfect ratings for their votes on key issues that also included defense and creation of the new U.S. Department of Education.

Rep. Beverly Byron, D - Md., received a 73, the second highest rating among Maryland's representatives, for her votes to increase defense spending.

Rep. Clarence Long, D - Md., voted for measures favored by the conservative group 33 percent of the time.

Rep. Parren Mitchell, D - Md., Sen. Charles McC. Mathias, D - Md. and Sen. Paul Sarbanes, D - Md., each received zero ratings while Rep. Gladys Spellman, D - Md., got a 10 percent rating.

New directions to hold confab

"Reaching Out To Women" is the title of a two - part conference to be presented by Baltimore New Directions for Women, Inc. for service providers in Maryland. The conference will begin Sept. 25 at the Ramada Inn, exit 17 at Security Boulevard, in Baltimore County.

The theme of the first day's agenda, "Empowerment: New Dimensions in Leadership", will be presented by Edie Seashore, a consultant to organizations in the areas of leadership, management, and human relations issues.

On September 26, the conference will continue at the Sheraton Inn, I - 270 at Route 85, in Frederick, Maryland. Jane Threatt, a native of Appalachia and founder and president of Rural American Women, will address the topic "Meeting the Needs of the Rural Women".

Marian E. Goetze, Executive Director of Baltimore New Directions for Women, Inc. will introduce both the Baltimore County and the Frederick County conferences.

Dr. Mary Lynn Fletcher, Public Health Specialist, will discuss strategies for organizing services to women and will moderate a panel of resource persons at the Sept. 26th conference.

"Reaching Out To Women" is made possible through funding by the C&TA prime sponsors in Baltimore County and Frederick County.

The conference begins each day at 8:30 with registration and a continental breakfast and concludes at 4:00 p.m. A registration fee of $15 for one day or $25 for both days is payable to Baltimore New Directions for Women by September 19th.

For further information concerning the program, overnight accommodations, and directions to the conference sites, call (301) 235 - 9800.

Meanwhile, Kevin had gone across the street to a neighbor's house and the policeman followed. Shortly afterward, some 10 police cars and a paddy wagon rolled onto Saxton Avenue and Mrs. Clarke's neighbors came out of their homes.

"I told my sons, 'You haven't done anything, so just let them arrest you,' " Mrs. Clarke said.

She told the AFRO a white policeman grabbed her and slammed her against a patrol car. Mrs. Clarke said she had bruises on her upper left arm and lower right arm.

When Saxton Avenue residents protested the way Mrs. Clarke was treated, a white officer allegedly ordered "all you black n——s get back on the sidewalk."

Mrs. Clarke, Kevin and Mark were arrested and charged with failure to obey a police officer.

They were transported to Western District, then Mrs. Clarke was taken downtown to the women's detention center. She was initially told she probably would be released within a few hours. It was 12 hours before she was finally released.

Mike Bass, police department spokesman, said the arresting officer reported that Kevin's car was double-parked and the motor was running with no one in the car. The policeman further reported that Mark and Kevin came out of their house, screaming and cursing.

One of the sons interferred when the policeman attempted to arrest his brother, and the entire family was arrested, the report said.

The Internal Investigation Division began investigating charges of excessive force and discourtesy filed by Mrs. Clarke's neighbors on Sept. 2, Bass said.

Mrs. Clarke said she plans to hire an attorney and Kevin, who is employed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation in Washington, D.C., said he plans to file a complaint with the Baltimore office of the FBI to investigate the incident.
