Court rules man's statement about murder 12 minutes too late

ANNAPOLIS — When Baltimore police obtained a statement in 1978 from James McClain incriminating him in the murder of an infant child, they apparently took 12 minutes too long to get it.

McClain was arrested at 2:43 p.m. on Sept. 11, 1976, but did not finish giving his inculpatory statement until 2:55 p.m. the next day, causing police to violate a Maryland court rule requiring that defendants be taken before a judicial officer within 24 hours of their arrest.

Five months after his conviction, the state's highest court decided in a case called Johnson vs. State that illegally obtained statement's such as McClain's could be ruled as inadmissible as evidence.

The high court Tuesday said the Decision could be applied retroactively to McClain's case or others in a similar posture.

The 6-1 decision by the Court of Appeals, with Chief Judge Robert Murphy dissenting, overturned McClain's conviction and ordered him a new trial.

The court said its April 1978 decision regarding the admissibility of improperly obtained statement could be applied retroactively, but only if the issue of prompt charging of a defendant has been raised at the trial level, and if the appellate review of the case had not been completed by the time the 1978 opinion was made.

Although McClain's conviction came before the high court decided on its exclusionary rule in the Johnson case, McClain's attorney had already raised the issue at his trial and his appeal process had not been completed.

The court ruled, therefore, the Johnson decision could be applied to the McClain case.

In his long dissenting opinion, Murphy charged, "The majority compounds the error committed by a divided (4-3) court in Johnson vs. State by applying its exclusionary rule to all criminal convictions not final on the date that that case was decided where the issue was preserved for appellate review by timely objection made at the trial."

But Associate Judge Marvin H. Smith, writing for the majority, said, "It would be unjust and unfair to hold that Johnson, who raised an issue, is to have the benefit of the holding in his case, but McClain, who raised the same issue, is not to have the benefit of that holding."

"It makes fish of one and fowl of the other," wrote Smith. "It simply does not comport with the American tradition of equal justice under the law."

Police investigate drowning at Rosewood state hospital

Police are investigating the drowning of a 26-year-old patient at the Rosewood Center for the mentally retarded who was left alone in a bathtub.

Robert Haynie, a profoundly retarded man who has lived at Rosewood for 20 years, was left alone in a tub by an attendant who went to get soap and returned to find him slumped in the water.

Haynie was pronounced dead by a Rosewood doctor.

Marvin Malcotti, Rosewood's superintedent, said he immediately suspended the employee, whose name was withheld, and would recommend to the state Department of Personnel that the 45-year-old attendant be fired.

County police said today the results of their investigation would be sent to the state's attorney's office, which would decide whether to press criminal charges.

"This tears you apart," Malcotti said. "We put up all the safeguards we can and then this happens. She only had to walk about 50 feet to get the soap."

Hughes calls economic forecast 'bad news'

ANNAPOLIS — Gov. Harry Hughes labeled the economic forecast for Maryland he received Wednesday as "bad news," but said the state should be able to weather the financial downturn without raising either sales or income taxes.

The governor, however, said some method must be found to boost revenue that goes into the now-sagging transportation trust fund, leaving open the possibility that Maryland's 9-cent per gallon gasoline tax may have to be raised.

"Relatively speaking, compared with the last two or three years, it's bad news," Hughes said of the economic picture outlined to him at a meeting of the state Board of Revenue Estimates.

"What is most disturbing to me is the income tax, our biggest source (of revenue)," he said.

Income tax revenue declined during the last three months of Fiscal Year 1980, April, May and June, by 6.7 percent and was off in July by 4 percent, state budget officials said.

Comptroller Louis L. Goldstein attributed the decline in revenue to the combined effects of the national recession and growing unemployment, and said those effects will be felt at least through December.

Hughes said the revenue decrease would undoubtedly mean a decline in the amount of state aid sent to localities next year for such services as police and education.

"We have to prepare for a rather austere budget," he said.

Concerning the transportation problem, Hughes said, "Either we'll have to get more revenue or cut back severely on transportation projects."

Goldstein, however, was more optimistic, saying, "In my opinion, these figures don't disturb me. In January of 1981, when whoever is sworn in as president of this great nation, the economy is going to pick up. I predict that revenue will pick up in the spring."

The figures provided by Goldstein, who heads the Board of Revenue Estimates, will be used by Hughes in preparing the fiscal 1982 budget, which will be submitted to the General Assembly in January to cover the year that begins July 1, 1981.

Goldstein said budget estimates for Fiscal Year 1981, the current fiscal year, have been revised downward by $14 million.

The decrease primarily reflected an estimated decline in sales tax revenue of $17 million and the elimination by congress of federal revenue sharing, another $34.7 million, but was mostly offset by expected increases in state tobacco tax revenue, interest on investments and state lottery receipts.

Goldstein told Hughes, however, that as much as $30 million in lottery revenue may not be available for the 1982 budget if District of Columbia voters approve a lottery for Washington in November.

The state's general fund will also be depleted by the 1980 legislative decision to transfer a portion of the corporation income tax and the motor vehicle titling tax to the transportation trust fund, Goldstein siad.

But Hughes defended the decision to make that transfer, saying it was the proper way to manage the state's resources given the economic conditions at the time. (UPI)

Sachs, election judges squabble over pay raises

Attorney General Stephen Sachs has warned Baltimore election judges they would be violating state law if they fail to report for duty on Nov. 4 in a dispute over their pay.

Many of Baltimore's 2,000 ballot judges have threatened to resign or stay home on election day unless they receive a $25-a-day raise granted by the General Assembly but held up by an attorney general's opinion.

The job action threats were the result of Sachs' ruling that judges appointed before July 1 cannot receive the pay raise unless they are reappointed to another term. The state constitution states that officials cannot be given raises during their terms of office, Sachs said.

He said election judges must serve their terms unless the Board of Elections Supervisors excuses them from duty. Sachs warned that judges who fail to report for work on election day face serious penalties under state Law.

Court: 3-time loser law can't be used more than once

ANNAPOLIS — Maryland's three-time loser law, which premits sentences without parole for persons convicted of a third violent crime, cannot be used more than once, the Court of Special Appeals has ruled.

The court overturned two consecutive 25 year terms without parole a Prince George's County judge imposed on James A. Calhoun, who had been convicted of his third and fourth armed robberies.

The state's second highest court said the law applies only to third offenses and that a defendant must be eligible for parole while serving a term for a fourth offense.

The state does have a four-time loser law for persons who have been convicted and served prison terms for three violent crimes. But that did not apply to Calhoun because he did not serve time in prison for all of the crimes he has committed.

16 die on state highways

Sixteen persons lost their lives during this six-day period on Maryland highways according to Lt. C. R. Troutman of the Maryland State Police.

Of these fatalities, nine were drivers and seven were passengers. Alcohol was a contributing factor in seven of the deaths, speed in 12 and driver error in 16. Four motorcyclists died on Maryland highways this past period.

"How I doubled my chances for success."

"In college, I took advantage of the Army ROTC program. And along with my major, it really prepared me for success.

"Your son or daughter can double his or her own chances of success, too. By enrolling in one of the many Army ROTC programs on campuses across the nation.

"Army ROTC training prepares a young person for leadership and management responsibilities. It's a chance to lead people as well as manage money and equipment. A way to gain valuable skills and knowledge. A place to develop self-confidence and decision-making abilities, too. It's the kind of training a young person can use anywhere.

"But there are also other ways ROTC can double your son or daughter's chances for success. Scholarship opportunities, for instance. Plus financial assistance up to $1,000 a year.

"The final reward of taking Army ROTC is graduation day. Because on that day, your son or daughter will receive both a college degree and a commission in today's Army, which includes the Army Reserve and National Guard. And that's something you both can be proud of. I sure was."
