—State worker wins suit

Mitchell said that the case was precedent-setting. "It shows that there is a tremendous amount of work to be done right here in our own back yard. We cannot expect state agencies to properly adhere to affirmative action mandates if they can look at the Department of Legislative Reference, which is under the control of the state legislature, and see rampant racism."

Carvel Payne, current head of the department, was quick to point out that the racial imbalance which existed in the department was the result of the policy of his predecessor, Everstein, and that he was still working to correct it.

"Everyone needs to be given an opportunity to fill the employment needs of the department," he said, "and I'm very pleased with the progress that has been made."

Payne pointed out that, since Hughes' charges were filed, the percentage of blacks in his department has increased appreciably.

Currently, 15.5 percent of the professional staff of the code revision division of the department is black, and 36.5 percent of the support personnel (secretaries, etc.) is black.

Blacks make up 14.2 percent of the professional ranks of the legislative division, and 11.1 of the support staff there.

When Hughes filed the suit, he was the only black professional employed by the code revision division of the Legislative Reference Department.

As a result of the case, Hughes has been advanced two pay grades, and his salary has jumped correspondingly, from $26,000 to $31,000 per year.

He also received a cash settlement of approximately $15,000.

Hughes refused to discuss the terms of the agreement, but he did tell a reporter that he was relieved that the process was over.

"It just seemed like something that had to be done," he said, "not only for myself, but for all blacks in the department as well. If you see what appears to be an injustice being committed and you don't challenge it, then you are participating in that injustice."

Young named named to management commission

Larry Young

Larry Young, D-38th, of the Maryland House of Delegates recently was appointed by Gov. Harry Hughes to the Maryland Solid Waste Management Commission.

In accepting the appointment, Delegate Young said, "solid waste management problems severely affect black neighborhoods. Uncollected garbage is not only degrading, it generates diseases and provides the rat population with enough food to make them the most feared ghetto residents for mothers and children.

"Diseases such as rat bite fever, salmonellosis and murine typhus fever are unknown in the suburbs but common in the inner-city. My appointment to the Commission will insure that we find a safe and equitable answer to this problem."

The Commission, established pursuant to SJR 11 of the 1980 Maryland General Assembly, is to report to the Legislature on the current status of and the potential for future development of solid waste management and resource recovery activities.

Dr. Belva Jensen was selected as chairperson.

Young, a second-term member of the House of Delegates, serves on the House Environmental Matters Committee. Young's legislative concerns are health, neighborhood development, energy and assuring adequate state assistance to black institutions.
