The Baltimore Neighborhood Heritage Project is currently collecting and reproducing photographs of black Baltimoreans in their lives from 1870 - 1970.

The group announced recently that it is in the process of attempting to preserve some of the aspects of black life in Baltimore which stand the chance of being lost forever.

Representatives from the group say that the photographs need not leave the possession of the owners and that they will try to reproduce them the same day.

The pictures collected will be used for historical records and also for possible inclusion in an upcoming project on Blacks in Baltimore.
