Reservoir Hill residents at odds

—Woman in need— of oven

By James M. Abraham
AFRO Staff Writer

Almost four months after the last general membership meeting of the Reservoir Hill Community Association distinctgrated amidst argument and dissension, residents there appear no closer to solving the problems which have split the group.

Currently, the Department of Housing and community Development has assumed control of RHCA's housing component, and at a recent executive board meeting, members discussed ways to regain control of the project.

But discussion was stymied repeatedly by Minnie Williams, a member of the Residents for a Better Reservoir Hill, who harangued those at the meeting with charges that the organization was not organized with poor and middle income residents of the community.

Another RHIB member later charged that the meeting was illegal because a quorum was not present.

When Ms. Fulton that HCD had assumed several functions of the organization, she responded by saying she didn't believe that was illegal because a resolution of the community has suffered.

He said that HCD has to meet with each splinter group in the area to formulate policy, saying that he expects progress to be made.

But then they all get together and nobody wants to work with anybody other," he complained.

Mrs. Mary Cheatham of the 1400 block of McCulloh St., calls the people who call on her to try to help her out "angels."

I don't call you people anymore, she says softly. "The Lord said he would provide for His children ... and angels didn't have wings. I know sent by God to help others."

Mrs. Cheatham, drew city wide attention in November when a housing inspector, about to write her a citation for certain housing code violations, took the time to visit her and found the family without food, heat or a means of income.

The day before, the housing inspector said, Mrs. Cheatham's 81, had buried the last of her 26 children. With his death, the only source of income was a so gone.

The large, three-story row house had no heat, the rent had not been paid; and there was no food, anywhere.

The entire family was huddled in the kitchen, the small babies on a mattress placed carefully near the open door of the oven, to stay warm: When AFRO reporters visited her.

After stories of Mrs. Cheatham's plight reached the public through the media, help began to come, and for now, at least, Mrs. Cheatham does have heat and food.

But when the oil in the tank is gone, the family will again face bad times.

"The oven is out," said Mrs. Cheatham when the reporter visited her early this week. "At least when we didn't have heat before, we could sit by the oven to keep warm.

Now that's gone, and the repair man said there is nothing he can do to fix it.

The irony of the situation is that Mrs. Cheatham's husband was an employee of the Baltimore Gas & Electricity company for 40 years, but despite his years there, the company has not, according to Mrs. Cheatham, offered to help...not in any way.

"You would think that after Alexander's years there that they would help some...but they don't offer anything, Mrs. Cheatham said.

"I have a turkey in the refrigerator that somebody gave us that I wanted to cook for Christmas, but I can't. And I would like to bake some bread I can't afford to pay what the stores want us to pay.

But the biggest concern she has, she says, is what the family will do when the oil runs out.

"The furnace" has a leak in it, she explained. "There's oil on the floor now. I don't think the oil is going to last much longer.

She said that despite requests to her landlord to fix the furnace, no action has yet been taken. And he won't help her pay for it so that what she has runs out because the terms of her lease said she was responsible for paying for her own heat.

Times seem like they have gotten real bad, she said.

Mrs. Cheatham said she and her husband paid, and there was no food, anywhere.

Deaf community protests budget cuts

Representatives of Maryland's deaf community recently asked Gov. Harry Hughes to restore a new $100,000 program designed to provide mental health services for the deaf.

Hughes met with six members of the Maryland Association for the Deaf for about 30 minutes to discuss the Health Department program, which was eliminated in sweeping budget cuts before it was ever implemented.

Afterwards, group members said they believed Hughes understood their problem, but were uncertain whether the governor would move to have the money restored.

One young woman in the group said she gave Hughes a copy of the July-August issue of Deaf American Magazine, which had his picture on the cover signing the legislation in May that was to implement the program they are now seeking to restore.

"Deaf people have the same problems hearing people have every day," said Sandi Larue, a deaf social worker for Catholic Charities in Baltimore. We experience the same emotional problems.

Others in the group said the suicide rate among the deaf is increasing and that counseling and other mental health services are also needed.

To emphasize their unhappiness with the program cut, the Maryland Association for the Deaf is attempting to rally as many of the organization's 1,000 members as possible for a demonstration outside the governor's mansion soon.

Hughes, however, is expected to be out of town.

Dr. Allen Sussman, a deaf Mary Land psychologist and dean of Student Affairs at Washington's Gallaudet College, said of the meeting with Hughes "We are hopeful, but we are not satisfied."

It's a deplorable situation, so many people not getting mental health services, he said with the aid of an interpreter.

Of the $109,000 needed for the program, Sussman said, "that's not much."

Urban League announces essay contest

The Baltimore Urban League has announced an essay contest for graduating high school seniors and undergraduate college students, the winners of which will receive tuition-assistance grants totaling $750 each.

Benjamin Phillips, director of the communications department for the BUL, said in a prepared statement that the contest, sponsored by the National Urban League, will choose a total of 15 winners nationally.

Funds for the grants are being supplied by the Liggett Group, Inc., a family of companies which manufacture and distribute products ranging from pet foods to wines and spirits to soft drinks and cigarettes.

This is the sixth annual essay contest the corporation has sponsored cooperatively with the National Urban League.

The topic for this year's essay is "The Minority Viewpoint: Equal Opportunity Through Education in the Five American Society." Entries to the Baltimore office, which will be sent to a national judging board for final decision, must be postmarked no later than March 27, 1981.

All essays must be mailed to Essay Contest, Baltimore Urban League, 1426 Eutaw Place, Mondawmin Concourse, Baltimore, Maryland 21215.

Phillips said that essays must be documented, and that the documentation MUST BE ATTACHED TO THE ESSAY. All essays without such documentation will be eliminated, he said.

Each applicant must submit with his essay, proof of student status, including either a xerocred letter of acceptance from a college or a current transcript from an accredited post-secondary institution.

Seniors who have not yet received a letter of acceptance should submit a letter from their high school principals stating that they are graduating seniors.

While the grants are not intended to cover the entire tuition bill for any student, they should help reduce or defray the costs considerably.

Phillips said that the grants are an important joint venture between the Liggett Group and the Urban League Movement to increase and support college opportunities for minorities in the inner city.

In addition to the grant, each winner will receive a plaque and — will have his or her picture featured at the Liggett Group, Inc., booth during the National Urban League Conference in Washington, D.C. next year.

Winners will be announced no later than May 29, 1981.

For more information, contact Ms. Maggie Lane, director of Educational and Youth Incentives of the Baltimore Urban League, at 523-8330.
