WICS opens nominations for 'Rosa Parks' awards

Civil rights catalyst, Rosa Parks, referred to at the "mother of the modern freedom movement" will again this year be recognized by Women in Community Service, Inc. when the Annual Rosa Parks Award is presented to an outstanding individual.

The annual award is given in honor of Mrs. Rosa Parks in recognition of "extraordinary acts of ordinary people."

A recipient of numerous awards, citations, and honors herself, Mrs. Parks last year presented the award in person at the WICS National Board and Corporation Banquet in Minneapolis, Min. This year's presentation will take place in Knoxville, Tenn.

Rosa Parks dramatically influenced the civil rights movement after refusing to give up her seat on a segregated bus in Montgomery, Ala. in 1955. The late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. speaking of her said, "Her courage and dedication will be an inspiration to generations yet unborn.

"Your creative witness was the fuse that led to the 'modern stride' toward freedom," said Dr. King.

The Annual Rosa Parks Award is the highest recognition given by Women in Community Service, Inc. "It commends the extraordinary commitment and service of ordinary people in individual efforts to alleviate human suffering," said WICS Executive Director, Dr. Arlene K. Schindler.

"The award is given with no restriction," Dr. Schindler explained. "The award is given to volunteers, spouses, family members, community leaders, or anyone who at great sacrifice has supported the volunteer service of others."

Women in Community Service, Inc. is a coalition of five major national women's groups founded in 1964 in response to the plight of poor women. Its coalition members include National Council of Negro Women, National Council of Catholic Women, National Council of Jewish Women, Church Women United, and American GI Forum Women.

With 15 years experience in job training and voluntarism, WICS has amassed a volunteer capability of 27 million people and an organizational geographic coverage which includes each or the 50 states, the Commonwealth, and United States territories and trusts. but now, more than ever, we need to keep the vision of Dr. King alive. In the face of the economic uncertainties of high inflation, high unemployment, and faltering growth, public policymakers are being forced to rethink our approach to basic social and economic problems. While this is an important and necessary task, it must be carried out with a special sensitivity to the needs of the poor and the powerless. Poverty, racism and economic disparities have not been eliminated in our society. In fact, in some instances, these signs of injustice have intensified in recent years. Therefore it is essential that we not attempt to solve our national economic ills at the expense of the human dignity and fundamental rights of the poor and the weak.

"I pray that the spirit and the vision of Dr. King will strengthen us to resist injustice and discrimination in these difficult times. May his life inspire us to seek solutions to our national problems that are grounded in a broad vision of the common good and that reflect the unique human dignity of all persons.

Religious care team at Provident has 55 volunteer chaplains

Rev. Johnson's corps of ministers aids healing through unusual service programs

Prior to the inception of the Chaplain Program at Provident Hospital, the hospital's management was challenged with problems of interpreting the clergy's role and relationship as a part of patient care team.

Rev. William E. Johnson was first to introduce a program to Provident Hospital and he later volunteered services to the hospital to become part of its function in dealing with the spiritual needs of the patients.

Recognizing the need for a chaplaincy program for patients he initiated a program for religious patient care and wrote a proposal in 1975 to develop it.

The Chaplaincy Program was instituted that same year.

The program was also the vehicle for information to be transmitted between the patient, ministers, and hospital staff.

Rev. Johnson offered such a service as essential to the healing process.

The program also furnished ministers for patients who did not have their own minister.

As director of religious activities, Rev. Johnson is now responsible for all religious programs.

He also organized a group of volunteers from various churches, the hospital staff and resource persons in the community.

This group known as the Chaplain Corps has a total of 55 active members. Each volunteer is oriented, given ideas, guidelines, rules and regulations to cope with working among the sick.

The Corps also functions as clergy representatives to particular religious community groups, patients, their families, staff and liaisons for pastors who cannot attend their parishioners. They are specialists in Pastoral Care and interpret the religious concerns and backgrounds of patients to staff members, and coordinate religious resources of the community.

The Corps conducts Worship Services on each floor of the hospital and in the Chapel and participates in hospital programs, sponsor workshops to enhance their skills in working with the medical staff and the patients.

The services of the chaplaincy program are needed on a daily basis, requiring the clergy persons to provide 24-hour hospital services.

The Volunteer Corps of the hospital has donated 5,000 hours a year since the program started. And has raised $1,100 for holiday activities at the hospital for Provident Employee Activity Committee (PEAC).

In addition, the Corps has donated over $200 to the Western District Police for uniforms for the youth and assisted them in the completion of their goals.

The Corps has received awards and accommodations by the governor, the Senate, House of Delegates, the Baptist Clergy in Action, the Constant Care Community Health Group, Western District Police, Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance, Baptist Ministers Conference of Baltimore and Vicinity, Catholic Archdiocese of Maryland and AME Churches.

The Corp has also an award for services from the Board of Trustee of Provident Hospital.

FINANCIAL SUPPORT

Since 1975, various religious bodies have given $5,000 to renovate the Chapel office space, a foyer, pews, and furniture.

The Baptist Minister's Conference has held a Provident Hospital Day that brings at least $1,000 a year from the various churches.

Workshops and seminars are conducted on Death and Dying, Prevention of Suicide and Development of the Handicapped, Counseling, Methods and Procedures, Vocational and Rehabilitation, Radiology, Stroke Patients, Criminology, Crisis Intervention, Practicum of Verbatums, The Cancer Victim and Mental Health and a month series on Violence in the Family.

Employees of the State Department of Vocational Rehabilitation, the State Department of Social Services serve as resource persons.

The Corps was recently endorsed by the Progressive National Baptist Convention U.S.A., which has pledged $10,000 to the Provident Hospital Development Fund and the Chaplain Corps.

The Chaplain Corps has received grants from foundations of $2,000 for workshops and seminars. The Southern Baptist Convention of Maryland awarded $1,500.

For the past two years, the volunteers have served patients' dinner on Christmas Day.

The Chaplain Program prayer booklet is distributed to patients as they enter the hospital.

The director in 1979 coordinated the Fund Raising Drive for the Religious Community with luncheons and dinners at Provident and some $39,000 has been pledged to the hospital.

The Chapel is used three times a day for staff, patients and visitors, 9 a.m.; 5 p.m; and 12 Midnight.

Religious services are held on each floor Sunday morning which is unique to Provident Hospital.

The Program has performed 15 weddings, officiated at 30 funerals and has spent at least $300 in emergency situations for patients, and money for the needy for rent, gas, electric and other items needed to survive.

The Corps conducted workshops in churches for Deacons, Missionaries, Lay people, Hospital Ministers, and the Missionary Baptist Churchwide Institute on the Art of Ministering to the Sick; has written syllabi for Dundalk Community College, Community College of Baltimore and Morgan State University.

The Corps has also given five scholarships to persons who have been motivated to continue education in Pastoral Counseling in St. Mary's Seminary, University of Maryland School of Religion, Virginia Seminary and College, Morgan and Howard Universities.

Rev. Johnson's religious organizer is member of the board of directors of the Mental Health Association of Baltimore and the board of the Kennedy Institute. The Corps outreach program at Springfield State Hospital Mental Health Unit has raised $10,000 for workshops and seminars, chapel furnishings, honorariums.

American Red Cross marks 100th birthday as largest humanitarian organization

By Elizabeth M. Oliver

This time of year winter comes down hard on human beings who regardless of circumstance can do little to stave off disaster. Cold, high wind and fire are dreaded enemies but there is always the American Red Cross poised to help.

The organization is now in its 100th year. The local chapter at 2701 N. Charles St., Baltimore, 21218, 467 - 9905 has means to provide assistance.

All citizens can help by volunteering services and sending contributions. Your presence may be needed tonight. Do not hesitate to call at once. The Red Cross is there providing food, clothing and temporary housing, whatever is needed in a disaster.

Founded 1881

The American Red Cross disaster relief mission dates back to 1881.

In recent years, teams of trained Red Cross disaster specialists have been aiding Vietnamese, Cuban, and Haitian refugees and providing assistance during and after the Mount St. Helens volcanic eruption.

In 100 years, one thing has remained constant in Red Cross relief efforts: Clara Barton's founding philosophy that all assistance should be tailored to the circumstances and the needs of the individual.

It was not until 1900 and 1905, in successive congressional charters, that the Red Cross received official recognition as the nation's primary volunteer disaster relief agency.

By then, the Red Cross sharpened its expertise helping victims of the Johnstown flood, the Russian famine and yellow fever epidemics.

Then came the tidal wave that swept Galveston, Texas, in 1900, taking 6,000 lives, and the San Francisco earthquake and fires of 1906. The government now looked to Red Cross disaster experts for coordination of all relief efforts and for know-how in evacuating and sheltering victims.

Today, the Red Cross expends approximately $30 million annually to help victims of disasters that occur on an average of once every 14 minutes. Its help is there whether the disaster is a neighborhood fire, a chemical spill, or a thundering hurricane.

To make such a system work requires thousands of trained volunteers as well as professional disaster specialists.

Volunteers strengthen the backbone of the Red Cross. They are more than what isually their image, that is, either elderly ladies in flowing white uniforms patiently rolling bandages, or smiling young women handing otu coffee and donuts on some battlefront.

They often hold down full-time job as housewife, executive, nurse, laborer, or student, ot they may be retired or imprisoned.

Their motive is universal, to seek satisfaction through meaningtul service to humanity, and they do it free. Their is the greatest gift, the gift of self. Volunteer believe "service is the rent one pays for one's room on earth."

The small society that Clara Barton founded in 1881 thus became the largest humanitarian organization in the country.

But, most Americans have a fuzzy image of the Red Cross. Most are familiar with some parts but grasping the full impact eludes them although the Red Cross probably affects the lives of more Americans than any other nongovernmental organization.

Difficult to know is the diversity of the Red Cross, its involvement in so many services, disaster preparedness and relief, blood services, services to members of the armed forces and veterans, work with youth, community health, and international relations.

Opinion surveys tested the public's knowledge of the Red Cross. The results are dismaying. For instance, the organization has been teaching lifesaving for decades and most lifeguards are certified by the Red Cross, but the general public is dismally uninformed about this aspect.

However, even if the public's image of the present Red Cross improved, the image would be likely to become rapidly outdated.

To meet the challenges of its second century, the Red Cross is moving in new directions. Until recently, it seldom heeded Satchel Paige's admonition, "Don't look back because somebody may be catching up."

Disaster preparedness planning now provides mass evacuation and sheltering, feeding, emergency medical aid before and after the strike and casework services.

In the postdisaster period, the Red Cross assists with individual family needs for clothing, food, furnishings, rent up to 30 days, and minor repairs to make a home livable.

It also covers such disaster - caused health needs as the replacement of lost eyeglasses, prescription drugs, dentures, prosthetic devices, occupational supplies and equipment, and transportation.

Providing these services takes close cooperation with government agencies and other private organizations.

Shortly after a major disaster, the President of the United States may declare the location a disaster area to make available a broad array of assistance to victims under Public Law 93-288, the Federal Disaster Relief Act of 1974. Implementing the federal program is the job of the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA).

It offers sufferers low-interest loans, food stamps, surplus commodities, employment assistance, and individual family grants.

In recent years, the Red Cross, FEMA and other agencies have instituted "one-stop assistance centers" at the site of disasters where victim can find help at one central location.

In 1980, Red Cross services to U.S. Red Cross services to U.S. war veterans and their survivors resulted in awards from the federal government amounting to more than $313 million. The sum represents awards only for compensation, pension, and educational benefits. Not included are monetary benefits the Red Cross helped obtain in insurance medical care, burial expenses, and other federal aid to veterans. Over 4,000 U.S. hospitals and other facilities receive blood or blood products from the Red Cross. Volunteer today. Call 467-9905.

Ready to teach home nursing, first aid, parenting, child care, water safety, CPR.
