Law groups protest Legal Aid cuts

By Robert Sangeorge

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Powerful law groups, led by the American Bar Association, plan an intensive effort to stop President Reagan's proposed dismantling of the Legal Services Corp.

Reagan's budget slashing Office of Management and Budget has targeted for destruction the corporation, which provides legal assistance to an estimated 1.5 million poor people a year in civil cases.

A coalition of the nation's most prestigious bar associations made a show of force this week during a news conference at ABA national headquarters, vowing to fight the administration's plan.

Flanked by leaders of 12 metropolitan and state bar associations, ABA President W. Reece Smith said the coalition has not sought a meeting with Reagan, but will make its stand in Congress.

"I personally believe that this matter is one that has to be resolved on the hill (Congress)," said Smith.

Warning elimination of the program could cause social unrest, Smith called Reagan's proposal, "an unwise, unsound move that will cost our society far more, in the long run, than any immediate dollars we may save."

The corporation began as one of the Johnson administration's great society programs. It was shifted to a semi-private, government-funded agency when it came under attack by the Nixon administration in 1974.

It's lawyers generally handle routine civil cases, such as divorce work. But they also have initiated sweeping class action suits against tenant rules, abortion funding restrictions and welfare regulations.

The corporation is budgeted for $321.3 million this year, but OMB wants it to receive no funds in fiscal 1982. The administration has said individual states may continue such legal aid through block federal grants.

"In a country where the most heinous criminal is entitled to a free lawyer, why shouldn't law-abiding poor people have baisc legal counseling available to them?" said Philadelphia Bar Association Chancellor Jospeh H. Foster.

Represented at the news conference were the bar associations of Boston, California, Florida, Los Angeles, Maryland, Michigan, New York City, New York State, Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Texas and Wisconsin and the National Bar Association, a black lawyers group.

Legal Services Chairman F. William McCalpin plans to plead for the agency before a house subcommittee hearing next Tuesday. The panel, headed by Rep. Robert Kastenmeier, D-Wis., oversees the corporation.

Governed by an 11-member board of directors appointed by the president, the corporation has 323 legal services programs operating in 1,450 neighborhood offices in the 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and Micronesia.

Shortly before the ABA conference, a House appropriations subcommittee heard a prediction that the administration's proposal to allow funding through the federal block grants to states would also kill the program.

Dan J. Bradley, president of the Legal Services Corp., testified that giving this option to the states would — at best — mean a fragmented program. The corporation which now serves as a unifying policy maker would not exist.

Legislators 'end run'

Hearings on two bills designed to transfer funds back into two depleted social programs will be held next week in Annapolis.

The two bills, all co-sponsored by Delegates John Douglass, Walter Dean, Wendell Phillips and Howard "Pete" Rawlings, all of Baltimore, would end the sales tax exemption on video film and the gasoline tax exemption on exported fuel.

The money gained by the implementation of a sales tax on the two commodities would be used, according to the delegates, to fund the Department of Human Resources' public housing aid and purchase-of-care programs.
