Readership study

NEW YORK —S. Robert Jackson (Bob), to his many friends, joined Amalgamated Publishers, Inc., as general sales manager in July 1979. Soon after he was named a vice president.

Jackson, formerly Midwest sales director for National Black Network Radio, has an extensive background in media sales having served as account executive at CBS affiliate WBBM-TV, Chicago, and retail advertising manager for the Chicago Daily Defender.

Jackson has commissioned a readership study examining the top 50 markets—key to the API audience of weekly newspaper readers. When completed in mid 1981, the report will alter the opinions of many media and marketing executives who have not previously given serious consideration to the use of segmented media.

"It is a well known fact that blacks dominate the inner - cities," says Jackson. "Anyone who wants to increase market shares in the 80's is going to have to give serious consideration to segmented media to keep competitive and build a stronger franchise among minorities."

The message API sales people will take to media and marketing people focuses on the enormous impact of weekly community newspapers on black Americans.

S. Robert Jackson

They report the news from a black perspective. General market newspapers do not and cannot.

This unique black perspective attracts and holds the attention of 4,000,000 loyal readers every week.

Products or services advertised to blacks in weekly newspapers appear in an environment of believability.

The editorial content, as well as community events and service features lend credibility to an advertiser's message—the prime reason for an advertiser's success in the marketplace.

Nigeria: 18 months after military intervention

By Robert Kaylor

LAGOS, Nigeria (UPI) — Black Africa's most powerful country, 18 months after launching its first democratic government in 14 years, has stayed one step ahead of regional frictions, economic ills and often chaotic crime.

With an estimated 85 million people, Nigeria is the world's fourth largest democracy. It might have floundered without one thing — oil.

Oil brought in $24 billion last year, funding needed food imports and pushing an ambitious five - year, $100 billion development program. About half Nigeria's oil is sold to the United States.

A federal - style government using the U.S. constitution as its model was installed Oct. 1, 1979, after the election of political moderate and former schoolteacher Alhaji Shehu Shaghari, 56, as president.

Generals had run Nigeria since the 1966 assassination of the last democratic prime minister. In a process that surprised many on a continent where military or autocratic one - man regimes are most often the rule, the generals kept their promise. They bowed out of politics.

Shaghari has governed an uneasy and often shaky political alliance of his own Hausa and Fulani tribes, from the heavily moslem North, and the Eastern Ibos, who tried to break away as Biafra in 1967 and plunged Nigeria into a disastrous three - year civil war.

Shaghari's coalition has threatened to come apart several times. The most recent crisis was over the sharing of Federal revenue with the 19 states.

More than three - fourths of Federal revenue comes from oil. Shaghari's forces finally rammed through parliament a formula that keeps 53 percent for the Federal government, a 20 percent reduction.

That formula is being challenged in court by disgruntled factions. Legislative sessions have been marked by noisy arguments, walkouts and occasional fights that brought police with riot control gear onto the floor.

"We have not really worked out yet the relationships of the executive, legislative and judicial branches," says one senior government official.

"It is a new system and has its bumps. But I think the important thing is that everyone wants it to work. Nobody wants to go back to the repression of military rule."

In Lagos, the teeming capital, prosperity and dynamism are apparent in high - rise office buildings. Africa's busiest port risks being swallowed by congestion and a breakdown of services designed for less than half today's population of 4.2 million. Electricity and water regularly fail.

Crime, spurred by astronomical prices, 20 percent inflation and high unemployment, has surged as police struggle to cope with internal security functions taken over from the army. The army has been reduced from 250,000 to 146,000 men.

Mobs often take the law into their own hands. Lynching suspected robbers, beating them to death or sometimes placing them inside gasoline - filled tires and setting them afire.

Piracy, present in many West African ports, is at epidemic level in Lagos. The government recently acknowledged that of 50 - odd ships in port on any day, up to a dozen may fall victim to armed pirates who board from small boats.

They often know exactly where to find high - value cargo items, indicating possible complicity by port officials.

Another sort of security threat shook the government in December when 4,000 followers of a fanatical Islamic renegade in the Northern city of Kano tried to take over its mosque, touching off two weeks of bloody fighting.

The government finally ordered in the army, which used mortars and other heavy weapons to reduce the rebel stronghold to rubble. Total deaths, including many innocent civilians, have been estimated as high as 5,000.

Conference off

WASHINGTON, D.C.

Due to cuts in the Center for Community Change CETA project, the "Jobs for the 80's" conference has been cancelled.

The conference was scheduled to take place from June 16 to 19.

Another conference, however, is on the planning board. If the conference does take place, one of the subjects will be employment and training.

Green Berets arrive in Liberia to train guards

MONROVIA, Liberia (UPI) — The first anniversary April 12 of the bloody "sergeants' coup" which overthrew President William Tolbert has been marked by the arrival of 100 U.S. Green Beret soldiers and the destroyer USS Thorn.

To Liberians, their presence is a welcome symbol of the new interest the Reagan administration is taking in them while they are being ignored by almost every other country in the world.

There are two reasons for this global indifference.

Liberia, a West African coastal nation about the size of Pennsylvania with just 1.7 million people, is of little commercial or strategic interest to east or west.

More important, the pre-dawn coup staged April 12, 1980, by Army Master Sgt. Samuel K. Doe and fellow sergeants, who now sit on the ruling "People's Redemption Council" was followed by brutal public executions that appalled the world.

Today, partly because of the near-universal cold shoulder, this former slave colony is plagued by a lack of foreign finance and high unemployment.

Doe's early flirtation with the Soviet Union came to nothing, but Mommar Khadafy's Libya, keen to expand anywhere it can in Africa, sticks close to the Liberians.

But even the Libyan presence is low profile. A Liberian-Libyan Holding Co. is building a headquarters near the foreign ministry. It is also involved in a Libyan-capitalized bank and other projects.

Liberia was founded by freed American slaves and Doe sought to reestablish the traditional link with the United States, an objective that coincided with Reagan's reappraisal of foreign policy.

The Green Berets, used in the Vietnam War to train hill tribes, are here for 30 days to train Liberia's national guard of about 6,000.

"I think this can be correctly read as an example of strengthening of ties between the two countries," said State Department spokesman William J. Dyess in Washington. "They have requested this additional training capability and we've agreed to help them out."

The man in charge of Liberia's army is Thomas Quiwonkpa, 26, one of the sergeants involved in the coup. Today he is a major general and considered the most pro-American member of the regime.

Quiwonkpa held a news conference last month to protest the opening of the Libyan Embassy.

"Only the United States has come to the help of the Liberian people since the coup d'etat," he said.

Some excesses of the regime's early days have been curbed, bringing better relations with fellow African heads of states who were shocked by the killing of Tolbert when he was chairman of the Organization of African Unity.

Col. Harrison Penue, the corporal who killed Tolbert during the coup and officiated at the executions that followed, was removed from his post as armed forces deputy commander last September because of "mental instability."

Albany State prexy

ATLANTA —Dr. Billy C. Black has been elected president of Albany (Ga.) State College by the regents of the University System of Georgia.

Black has served as acting president since July 1, 1980 following the resignation of Dr. Charles A. Hayes as president.

Black, who was born on February 1, 1937, in Beatrice, Ala., received the B.S. degree in chemistry from Tuskegee Institute and the M.S. degree in food technology and the Ph.D. degree in bio-chemistry from Iowa State University.

Billy C. Black

He has been associated with Albany State College for the past 17 years: as professor of chemistry since 1964, as chairman of the department of chemistry and physics in 1966-70, as chairman of the division of arts and sciences in 1970-80, and as dean for the National Science Foundation and for the National Institutes of Health since 1966.

He is the author of several articles published in professional journals.

Black is married to the former Helen Jennings of McComb, Miss. They have a son and a daughter.

Percy Julian, a Black chemist, in 1935 developed physostigmine, a drug for treatment of glaucoma.

INDUSTRIAL ACHIEVER — Gerald H. Trautman (L), chairman and chief executive officer of The Greyhound Corporation, recently received the Jackie Robinson 1981 Industry Achievement Award at ceremonies in New York. Presenting the award to Trautman are Sidney Poitier (C), internationally-acclaimed actor and director, and Harry Belafonte, renowned actor and singer.

"MAD AS HELL." — Actor Gregg Morris, who starred in "Mission Impossible" and is currently in the TV series "Vegas," testifies before the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control hearings. He said he was "mad as hell" and proclaimed the proceedings "a waste of taxpayers money" whose tactics smelled of McCarthyism. The hearings are looking into drug abuse in the entertainment industry. Morris said he and many others in the industry had spent thousands of dollars and hours making films and appearances to fight drug abuse.

Tapes reveal 'slavery' of Jonestown victims

PHILADELPHIA — In the months preceding the Jonestown tragedy, Jim Jones and his People's Temple followers recorded their thoughts, their problems, and their aspirations.

These tapes, never before broadcast to the American public, form the basis of a chilling 90 - minutes documentary, "Father Cares: The Last of Jonestown," which was heard on NPR member station WUHY on April 23 at 9 p.m., in Philadelphia.

The NPR special describes in shocking detail the events and feelings leading up to the mass suicide of 913 men, women and children on November 18, 1978.

"This unprecedented documentary came about because of an obsession Jim Jones had," said Barbara Cohen, NPR's director of news and information.

"For years Jones tape recorded the daily activities of his followers and his own thoughts and sermons. The result is an amazing portrait of insanity and megalomania. I think these tapes go a long way toward explaining the mystery of the mass suicide and certainly the man behind that event."

James Reston Jr. is the creator and writer of "Father Cares" as well as the author of a book about the same tragedy, Our Father Who Art in Hell, recently published by the New York Times Book Company.

Shortly after hearing about the Jonestown tragedy, Reston flew to Guyana to begin research and literally stumbled on the tapes which had been stuffed in boxes and cartons in Jonestown.

The tapes were subsequently confiscated by the United States government, and Reston spent over a year seeking their release. In January, 1980 he succeeded in obtaining almost all of the tapes through a Freedom of Information request and then spent the next two months culling through over 900 hours in horrified amazement.

Reston says he listened to the tapes almost nonstop for two months. "They were beyond description — authentic evil, quintessential evil, a return to bestiality. What Joseph Conrad had begun in his novel Heart of Darkness, Jones ended."

Reston adds, "It became clear that with the Jonestown tapes, I could demonstrate just how the disintegration happened with Jones holding forth night after night.

"On the program, we came close to actually experiencing what happened to human beings who were separated from all reality except the one created by Jones," says Reston.

"Historically, man has gone into the wilderness for a time of testing — a time of human quest for enlightenment — but in this case, the wilderness was also a descent into bestiality, a descent into evil."

The fact that Jones taped his own descent makes this story unique, it is an authentic piece of cultural history — in all its horror," Reston concluded.

"Father Cares" includes some of Jones' early sermons while still in San Francisco, in which his charismatic style was already apparent. Once in Guyana, Jones transformation from evangelist to megalomaniac is revealed as he turns children against their parents, humiliates a follower before 900 other Jonestown residents, and exhorts his people to participate in numerous so-called "white night" ceremonies in which Jones leads them to the edge of mass suicide and pulls them back at the last minute.

"Says Deborah Amos, NPR producer of the documentary, "This is not a docu-drama, it is a reconstruction that we have made by weaving together the tapes and Reston's research.

"To hear this tragedy taking place is different than to see or read about it," she continued. "The sound of Jones' voice and that of his followers goes beyond the pictures we saw on the covers of news magazines. With this program, you can begin to understand how they made the final decision; you actually hear why they were able to do it."

Consumer Tips

By Robbie (Part II)

It is important to keep in mind that your task at a job interview is to relay to the employer how your skills can help his company in resolving its problems as he perceives them. This can not be stress enough. You must relate your skills, as one expert states, "to what is going on in the employer's head, not yours."

Your discussions with past or present employees is a tool which can help you at arriving at the answer as to what is or is not a problem within the company.

There exist certain questions that no employer is allowed to ask unless they are "bona fide occupational qualifications." As regards your marital status, you may not be asked "Are you married, singled, divorced, engaged or do you see your ex-spouse?"

However, once employed you may be questioned with regards to your marital status for insurance purposes. The number and age of any child may only be inquired into once you are hired and then only for insurance purposes.

The employer may explain manual labor, lifting, or other requirements of the job. In addition a physical examination may be required.

Coppin Dance Performance

The Coppin State College Dance Group will present its annual spring performance May 1 and 2 in the college auditorium, 2500 West North Avenue.

The recital is entitled "The Engagement" and consists of six dance suites that depict the dancer as total performer.

The subjects put to dance range from the very serious to the hilariously funny in the modern, jazz and African idioms of dance.

The program promises to be an exciting one and among the best highlighting the pride of Coppin on stage. The group is under the direction of Ms. Edna D. Simmons.

Two performances are scheduled for May 1 — one at 12 noon and the other at 7 p.m. On May 2, the program will begin at 7 p.m.

Admission is $2.00 for the general public; $1.00 for Maryland students with proper I.D.'s and .75 cents for children under 13 years of age. Coppin students will be admitted free.

Metro bus accident injures 25

A metrobus tipped over on its side early this week during heavy rain and hail slightly injuring at least 25 passengers, Maryland state police said.

A police spokeswoman said investigators believed that the brakes on the bus locked, making it difficult for the operator to stop the vehicle. But a thorough investigation was to be carried out before the actual case was known.

Most of the injured were taken to Southeast Community Hospital, and Southern Maryland Hospital, and two others were brought to the Malcom Grow Hospital at nearby Andrews Air Force Base.

A spokesman at Southern Maryland said 14 persons were brought to the hospital, and most were quickly released with minor cuts and bruises. Two passengers had dislocated shoulders, he said.

Officials said 11 others were taken to Southeast Community Hospital, including the bus operator who received minor bruises.

Police were on the scene at southbound Branch Ave. near Allentown Rd., shortly after the accident at 6 p.m.

Expert says dreaming helps solve problems

By Ann Sagi

Heeding the old adage "sleep on it" can help solve problems if you properly interpret clues in your dreams, a psychologist said this week.

Dr. Gayle Delaney, lecturing at Johns Hopkins University, explained her "incubation" and interpretation technique that uses dreams to unravel a dilemma.

Sleepers should write a one-line question or request, turn out the light, and repeat the question or phrase over and over. Not only does it "incubate" a solution, "you'll bore yourself to sleep," Ms. Delaney said.

Keep pencil and paper on the nightstand, and first thing the next morning, write down two or three words from the dream.

"You have to do it immediately. As soon as you think about the shower or coffee, your dream will disappear," Ms. Delaney said.

Then analyze the dream to find an answer to the problem.

Sometimes the answer is obvious. But most of the time, the solution unravels only after the dreamer answers a series of questions.

The most important aspect of recognizing clues is describing all the details, then determine how the description fits individual circumstances to provide the answer to the problem.

Spontaneous dreams can also point out how to unravel personal difficulties, Ms. Delaney said.

She related a dream a woman had with two female characters, one dressed in a bikini, the other in a business suit, who meet on the street and go into a restaurant for lunch.

The women want to sit by the picture window and enjoy the view, but the waitress tells them at a table in a dark corner. The woman wearing the suit tips the headwaiter $5 and both women move to a table by the window and enjoy lunch.

Ms. Delaney said the dreamer described the woman in the bikini as sexy, nice, docile, a description of herself. She characterized the woman dressed in the suit as forthright, capable and assertive, "the part of her that usually didn't get her way."

The dream "elucidated the two polarized parts of her" and encouraged the woman to "stand up and be counted" in her relationship with her husband—seen in the dream as the domineering maitre 'd, Ms. Delaney said.

She warned it is important to phrase the question correctly and not oversimplify the analysis.

A woman told Ms. Delaney about a dream she incubated to figure out why her relationship with her boyfriend was ending.

"Nina" posed the question, where is my relationship with Scott going?" She dreamed Scott invited her on a voyage on the Titanic.

"So she automatically assumed her relationship— notice the word 'ship'—was sinking. But that's too easy. And she phrased the question incorrectly by using the word 'going.' She should have asked what was wrong with the relationship," Ms. Delaney said.

Sleepers who don't make an effort to remember their dreams are missing a lot.

"To me," she said, "that's like having amnesia every night about what I did all day. I think it's fascinating trying to use the second part of your double life"

Ms. Delaney, educated at Princeton, Union College Graduate School and the C.G. Jung Institute of Analytical Psychiatry in Zurich, said dream incubation should only be done once or twice a week, but can be done more often because people experience four or five dreams during an eight-hour sleep.

City's Urban League holds annual meeting

The Baltimore Urban League, Inc. held its 56th annual meeting of its membership April 23 in the board room of the agency's headquarters.

As required by the bylaws of the Baltimore Urban League, membership meeting is called annually to give these individuals the opportunity to receive a report of the state of the agency and elect persons to serve on the executive board which is the policy making body.

Travis W. Vauls, president, provided the membership with an in-depth report on the state of the Baltimore Urban League.

Vauls stated that the League operated 10 programs and projects during fiscal year 80, with an operating budget of $4 million. The United Way of Central Maryland provided the agency with its core funds.

For every one United Way dollar, the Baltimore Urban League was able to secure three additional dollars from other funding sources which together enabled the agency to provide more than 18,000 persons in the metropolitan area with direct and indirect services.

Vauls reported that reducing unemployment continued to be the number one priority of the Baltimore League as well as the 115 national affiliates.

"Black unemployment in this city was the third largest among 11 large cities and more than three times the white unemployment rate of 5.9 percent," said Vauls.

"Baltimore Urban League employment programs have been laadened with an overabundance of clients and fewer job opportunities."

On an overall basis, five of the agency's programs are concentrated in the area of employment. Together they registered over 6,800 persons, referred more than half to employment opportunities which resulted in over 1,800 being placed in positions.

More than 1,900 other persons were enrolled in CETA or training opportunities because such opportunities do not exist while doubtful employers are laying off personnel rather than making new hires."

The agency's president also reported that there was a need for providing services in education, consumerism, youth incentives, health, welfare and housing was much greater during this period of economic adversity.

In addition to hearing the report of the president, the membership elected the following persons to their three-year terms on the executive board: Rev. John Coleman, pastor, Sharp Street Memorial United Methodist Church; Dr. Betty Stirling, University of Baltimore; Mrs. Mary T. Thompson, AFL-CIO Labor Agency for Community Service and Paul Yates, vice president and general manager, WJZ-TV.

Also elected to three-year terms were Harry McCalla, IBM; Peter Taliaferro, Attorney General's Office and John S. Ward, assistant superintendent, Baltimore County Public Schools.

BALTIMORE CITY

81 - WC - 0177. Clais I Waters, American Recovery Co., Inc., 44 Randall Street, Annapolis, Maryland 21401, to construct 100 year flood protection measures on the plant premises which are located at Andard Avenue and Birch Street in Baltimore City and for the removal of two existing piers from within the stream channel and the placement of riprap where the piers existed. The Administration has made a tentative decision to issue the permit as requested.

BC81GAP0001. Exxon Company U.S.A., 2801 Boston Street, P.O. Box 1288, Baltimore, Maryland 21224, to appropriate and use 150,000 gallons per day and a maximum of 200,000 gallons per day to be withdrawn from 10 wells in the Patuxent formation. The water is to be used in an oil recovery project on the applicant's property at the Exxon terminal facilities bounded on the north by Boston Street, on the east by Haven Street, on the south by Danville Avenue and where east - west extensions thereof would be located, and on the west by the Northwest Harbor in the Canton District of Baltimore City. In order to decrease the potential for pollution, the applicant has been ordered by the Administration to install sampling and a Temporary Permit for Emergency Appropriation has been issued. The proposed project will have a beneficial effect on the resource by removing quantities of a contaminant floating on the water table. The Administration has made a tentative decision to issue this permit for the requested quantity of water.
