later to Anne Arundel County.

Inspiring, how the elder Sewells, despite adversity and tragedies, enough to try people of lesser faith, continued to rear their family of 12 children.

Children present at the reunion were: John F., Clarence and Walter H. Sewell, Mrs. Lottie Lindsay and Mrs. Irene Mundell.

Geniuses

One of the 21 geniuses who will share the large cash prizes announced by the nationally known John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation has Baltimore ties.

He is James A. McPherson, the Pulitzer prize winning author ("Elbow Room"). He will receive $192,000 over the next five years to do exactly what he wants with it.

So will the other 20 winners who will share a total of $5 millionset aside by the foundation which stipulates winners can do as they please with their winnings!

McPherson, 37, now a professor at the U. of Va., at one time studied here in Baltimore at Morgan State U., in the political science education institute run by Dr. G. James Flemming. Remember at the time he resided on Barclay St., in northeast Baltimore.

Other black winners of the MacArthur cash przes are, Elma Lewis, Henry L. Gayes and James Willard.

And more

The DuBois Circle's 75th anniversary attracted a large and beautiful audience on Tuesday evening.

The black - tie affair at Blue Crest featured an historical review of Baltimore city's oldest study club. Mrs. Edna Over Campbell, president, presided with grace and dignity.

The entire evening was an experience in elegance — lighted birthday cake law-makers present represented the core of the black caucus, the members who had done more than most to ensure the survival of a host of black social institutions and social programs beneficial to us.

Howard "Pete" Rawlings, D-40; Lena K. Lee, D-41; Walter Dean, also of the 41st; John Douglass and Hattie Harrison of the 45th; Troy Brailey, D-40; and state Senator Clarence Mitchell, D-38, were present at the meeting. Although many in the audience probably were not aware of it, these law-makers, along with just a few others like Larry King, D-3d were all that stood against a strong conservative movement present in Annapolis this past session.

Led by Douglass, one of the dourest politicians in Baltimore, (but a skilled fiscal expert, they managed to circumvent the usual bickering among caucus members to develop the first planned strategy ever implemented by that group.

That strategy actually began the summer before the session, when Douglass announced that he planned on introducing legislation aimed at repealing several popular state programs or the tax exempt status of certain businesses. This move gave the caucus important bargaining power before the session opened, as one of Douglass' plans, the abolishment of the Project Open Space program, would have affected many of those same rural delegates and Senators who would have been most likely to vote against the maintenance of black institutions or social programs which benefit city dwellers.

When the session opened caucus members worked closely with Governor Hughes, and one of the governor's biggest victories in the legislature was the maintenance of those same programs and institutions made possible only with the solid support of the caucus.

Caucus members went so far as to vote, with most of the House of Delegates to accept their version of the budget, in order to expedite the restoration process, (most of the funds cut out of the budget for the programs in jeopardy were restored). This action brought them a slew of criticism, even from the caucus chairman, Del. Frank Conaway, D-40, who, along with Nathaniel Woods, D-P.G. Co., voted against the budget.

But the final results speak for themselves. Although this panelis was somewhat dissapointed that the audience didn't really take on the legislators, in retrospect, maybe such action was unwarranted.
