African Liberation Day

Thousands attend march, rally to renew 'freedom' commitment

By Anthony Powell

RICHMOND

African people from around the country came to Washington last weekend to renew their commitment to freedom for all black people. They came from the D.C. area, across the country and the world to state that "Africa must be free."

They feel that unless Africa is free then no black person in the world is free. This was the 23rd annual African Liberation Day and the sixth year the day has been sponsored by the All African Peoples Revolutionary Party (AAPRP).

On Saturday, more than 1,000 African people and "oppressed people" of other colors joined a rally and march in Malcom X Park. The brothers and sisters marched through the black community and returned to the park for a rally. Throughout the day, speeches and cultural performances were the agenda.

Making his annual visit was Kwame Toure, formerly Stokeley Carmichael, who flew from Japan to make this year's event. In attendance were spokesmen for several Liberation groups.

These groups were: The Palestine Congress of North America, The Front for the National Liberation of the Congo (Zaire), The Eritrean Liberation movement and the American Indian Movement.

The theme of this year's celebration was Pan Africanism: the total unification of Africa: scientific socialism or perish.

According to Sister Maisha, a member of the AAPRP's central committee and chairman of the All African Women's Liberation Movement, black people must move away from capitalism.

She feels that socialism will be an economic system that will develop change for black people. "The masses work and produce tremendous profits. But they don't make enough money for survival," Maisha said.

"The individual benefits from work of many workers on any given day pays for supplies. The rest of the day is for profits," she said. She added that under socialism, "The thrust is for human beings." She said that under socialism, the profits will not go to bank accounts, but for education and health care.

She said that under capitalism, "The workers will work for 40 years and don't have enough to live on." But the AAPRP's system isn't like communism, because workers will have a different salary range, unknown under communist rule. But Maisha added that the AAPRP's socialism system will take a great leap forward under communism. What about African countries that have used Socialism and have failed tremendously with it? (The example of this is Tanzania, a country under economic chaos.) "We must organize to liberate Africa and develop it economically," she said.

She says that colonialism stripped the African countries of their wealth and left it totally dependent on the West. She said that some African countries are dependent on one crop for development. She said that these countries must develop under socialism to produce more crops.

She said that several African countries have just become independent are dependents of the international market. These countries are Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Zimbabwe.

"Freedom Now, Power to the People," and "Africa shall be Free" were chants of a room full of people at a morning symposium Friday in the Blackburn Center on Howard University's campus.

The theme of the symposium was the "World Wide Socialist Movement, Gaining Ground and Getting Stronger." The morning conference discussed "The Present State of the World-Wide Struggle to Build and Consolidate National Liberation Movements and Political Parties in Africa and The World."

The National Liberation of the Congo started after the death of former president Patrice Lumumba. His followers were forced to run to Angola, where they helped the MPLA faction gain power.

Their spokesman Serge Mukenadi said, "Lumumba led the struggle in 1960 for economic, cultural and political independence. They said the president is a threat and he must disappear." He said the present ruler Joseph Mobutu was an agent for the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). He also said that Mobutu was a secretary for Lumumba during the 60's.

He made a mistake believing that by killing the revoutionary, you kill the revolution," said Mukenadi. "They used the golden rule: divide and conquer. We must free ourselves from the free world that is enslaving us," he added.

The Eritean Liberation movement is one of the few "freedom fighters "in the world that doesn't seek outside help. This is the longest fight for independence in Africa. Since 1961, the Eritrean Liberation movement has fought a number of foes.

First they fought a long and bloody war against the Ethiopia government headed by the Emperor Haile Selassie. Selassie's rule came to an end in 1974. Now a Soviet-backed military junta is in power. For the last seven years, the Eritrean struggle has been with the Soviet-backed government. The government uses Cuban soliders as mercenaries.

Spokesman Girmay Gebre claims the government is using nerve gas in the war. He is asking the American people to condemn the junta for the use of nerve gas.

Even though they are a ragtag army, they claim a fighting force that is 40 percent women. Gerbe said that they have made several significant victories over the junta.

"We are confident that in the final analysis the people's determination will win over," said Gerbe.

The Palestine Congress of North America is trying to build a board base against Zionism. Jafar Jaafri, their spokesman, said that Zionism and Judaism are two different things.

"Zionism is a Western oriented European phenomenon that is pouring into the Mideast and Africa. Zionism is European superiority over an indigenous population," said Jafari.

"On the other hand, Judaism is a sacred religion. We have a multi-religious land. Our struggle is against Zionism," he said.

The Pan African Congress of Anazia (South Africa) is trying to make a comeback after weak leadership almost destroyed the party, according to their North American spokesman Tladi K. Kakona.

They hope to take over Anazia from the whites and build it into a Socialist state. Kakona said the chief defender of South Africa is the United States, whom he claims uses cheap labor and make huge profits.

At the end of the presentation the crowd yelled, "Long live the African people"

TV watchers are not decreasing

WASHINGTON.

Are you watching as much television now as you did four or five years ago?

The AFRO asked 10 people at random in South Richmond this question. Here are respondents answers:

Jadina Patron, hair stylist: "More, because it's interesting and because the prices of things have gone up. I listen to the news to see what's going on, things about the President and the Pope. I use it to watch the news mostly."

Rodney Clements, cook: "Yes, I get into current events and what's happining all around the world, so I can be hip and don't be confused about a lot of things."

Theodore Jackson, businessman: "Yes, because I'm more interested in TV now than four or five years ago. It brings you all the news from around the world but you don't know whether it's true because they can tell us anything because we weren't there when it happened. All we have to do is believe it."

Henry Scott, retired: "Yeah, for one reason, to keep up with current events, politics and to keep up with what's going on. They're talking about cutting the budget money to R-CAP and senior citizen programs. A lot of people aren't going to make it."

Theresa Fourqurean, secretary: "No, because there's really nothing exciting on TV. There's too much balance. They show too much crime and people are learning from that crime. I'm really not a TV watcher if that's what if comes down to."

August Moon, businessman: "I don't watch TV that much. Because every time they portray a black man on TV he is either a super human or a stereotype role. The best show on the whole cotton-picking TV is the Jefferson — a black man leading a good life, excelling. It's well produced and George is definitely qualified."

Sheilà Smith, college student: "No, beacuse I don't have time and I wouldn't like to watch any more."

Solik Griffin, barber: "Yeah, every day. It's just something to do, but it's not as funny as it was four or five years ago. I mostly watch it on Friday nights. They don't show war pictures and cowboy pitcures like they used to . I liked them."

William Redd, pool manager: "Yes, because the programs are better. I like all the police shows, detectives, Amazing Animals, That's Incredible and true stories, things like that."

Shirley Chaney, cashier: "No, because I'm never at home. I would like to watch more good movies that are playing on the cable. I like gangster pictures and comedies, like Laverne and Shirley, Mork and Mindy, and oh, I love soap operas."

Naval Academy steps up minority recruitment efforts

The Naval Academy is continuing to step up its minority affairs recruiting program, according to Lt. Commander Monika Mitchell, senior minority admissions counselor at the U. S. Naval Academy in Annapolis.

"In fact, the Navy over all is trying to improve their recruiting of blacks, Hispanics and other minority personnel. We are at the point now where people are realizing that minority recruiting has not just been a fad with the Naval Academy or the Navy either, said Lt. Commander Mitchell.

At the present time, the academy's minority admissions counsleors have been increased from three to five officers, headed by Lt. Commander Mitchell, a graduate of D. C Teachers College and the Navy Officer Candidate School Working with her are former Naval Academy graduates, Lt. Jim Jackson and Eugene Ford, and Lts. Bob Cunningham, Rice University and Ed Marquez, New Mexico State University.

These officers are continuing the Naval Academy's policy of actively recruiting minority students by encouraging them to apply to Annapolis "Instead of waiting for them to contact us," explains Lt Jackson, who is in charge of the southeastern United States region, " We travel to high schools, attend college days and try to increase our one on one contact And once we make contact, we maintian that contact."

Statistics give credence to the academy's minority recruiting program's efforts. In the 20 year span between 1949, when the first black midshipman graduated from the Naval Academy and 1969, only 35 black midshipmen were graduates at Annapolis

By contrast, since 1970, 290 black midshipmen, including one woman have become Annapolis graduates, along with 78 Hispanics, 136 Oriental Americans, 12 Native Americans including one woman A total of 55 women graduated in the class of 1980 the first class to enroll women.

LT. COMMANDER Monika Mitchell is the head of the minority admissions program at the U.S. Naval Academy.

"The Naval Academy does not have a quota to meet in admitting minority members," said Robert W. McNitt, dean of admissions at the Naval Academy, "but it does share fully the Navy's commitment to reach a percentage proportion of minority members in its officer corps.

"A very energetic recruiting campaign led by minority members of the Naval Academy Candidate Guidance staff produced a record percentage 14.8 percent of minority members to enter the class of 1984, he points out.

As of April 30, 1981 there are 350 minority and 276 women midshipmen at the Naval Academy The minority representation in the entire brigade of midshipmen has increased from approximately two percent in 1968 to more than 12.5 percent today.

Medicaid may lose $90 million funding

WASHINGTON,

The Medicaid program in Virginia will lose more than $90 million in federal funds during the next four years if Congress passes proposed federal budget cuts, state health officials say.

But Bedford Berrey of the State Department of Health told the House Appropriations Committee last week that Virginia isn't alone in its Medicaid woes.

"Every state in the nation is in trouble with Medicaid," he said. "We in Virginia are in less trouble than many."

Berrey cautioned, however, that federal budget cuts will force the state to choose between putting more of its own money into the Medicaid program or reducing its Medicaid services

"Cut, cap and block will be the three key words for the Medicaid program," Berrey said.

The federal government has been funding about 55 percent of Virginia's Medicaid program, with the state paying the rest The state's share of the program cost $375 million in general funds in 1980 - 82.

That is expected to swell to $464 million in 1982 84, and could cost the state more than that if the federal budget cuts are passed by Congress, state budget officials said.

One way the federal government could ease the budget cutting pain would be to eliminate many regulations involved in the Medicaid program, Berrey said.

"Every time we turn around now, we are faced with a regulation that says, 'Thou shalt not.' If we had more flexibility, we could manage the Medicaid program in a much more efficient way," Berrey said

But Andrew Fogarty of the State Department of Budget and Planning said: "flexibility will not solve the money problem

"Flexibility will mitigate it to some extent, but we'll still have some serious money problems," Fogarty said.

Robert Triebley, acting director of Virginia's Medicaid program, detailed some of the ways his office is trying to pare down Medicaid costs, following a blueprint approved by the 1981 General Assembly

National barristers support legal aid for poor

The Board of Governors of the Association of Trial Lawyers America (ATLA) has officially announced its support for continued federal funding of the Legal Services Corporation. (LSC)

Meeting on May 15th at ATLAs Sixth Circuit Meeting in Detroit, the Board of Governors adopted a resolution that restated the organization's long-standing commitment to the "extension of free legal assistance to those individuals unable to retain private counsel."

On that basis, the group decided to go on record as being "strongly opposed" to the abolition of the Legal Services Corporation and resolved that the "federal funding of the LSC should be continued at not less than it present level."

The resolution adopted by the group further stated that the LSC should be reauthorized without further restricting the access of the poor to adequate legal representation."

The group also resolved that the LSC should make available funds to provide for substantial private bar involvement in the delivery of such legal services

ATLA president-elect Richard Gerry of San Diego told the group that "any cessation of funding of the LSC program would probably result in great disruption in the furnishing of legal services to the poor because of lack of time and money to develop substitute programs."

The ATLA is the nation's largest trial bar organization with more than 44,000 members throughout the United States, Canada and Puerto Rico.
