Food stamp spending boosted

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An emergency bill that boosts food stamp spending $1.7 billion to keep full benefits flowing through Sept. 30 was quickly approved June 23, by the House Agriculture Committee.

Chairman Kika De La Garza, D-Texas, said the bill would be expedited and he hoped that rules would be suspended so that the full House would quickly consider the stopgap measure.

The bill, sought by the Reagan administration, would raise a ceiling on food stamp spending for this fiscal year from $9.74 billion to $11.48 billion. Without the legislation, benefits would have to be slashed this summer.

family with what they wanted."

For 23 years, Mackall worked at the Post Office in the motor vehicle service unit as a truck driver and drove a cab part-time for more than 15 years.

Last Sunday, when Mackall left the Post Office at 11:30 p.m. he decided to drive his cab. "He would usually drive his cab until 5 a. m. or until he was tired," said Mrs. Mackall with a quiver in her voice.

He had only been driving his cab an hour on June 29, when police received a call at 12:19 a.m. for a shooting on Charles Street.

Police report witnesses saw two passengers leave Mackall's cab in the 1110 block of Kenwood Ave., and heard a loud noise. Mackall had been shot in the chest and police did not know if he had been robbed.

No arrest had been made at AFRO presstime and police were still investigating the case.

Mrs. Mackall told the AFRO, "We (the family) had talked to him about driving a cab at night. He never wanted to carry a gun and he loved his work.

Funeral services for Mackall were held July 1 at Berea Temple Seven Day Adventist Church. In addition to his wife, he is survived by four children, Benjamin J. Mackall Jr., Renita Dawn and David Mackall, two sisters, Leatha J. Mackall and Anna M. Mackall, two brothers, Amos and Michael Mackall, two grandchildren and his parents, Benjamin and Martha Mackall.

When Mrs. Rose Daniels talked to her daughter last Thursday, she said, "She seemed so happy and said she was going out."

According to Mrs. Daniels, Mrs. Margaret Robinson, her 19-year old daughter, had planned to meet her husband. "They had been having problems with their marriage and were planning to reunite."

Thursday was the last time Mrs. Daniels talked to her daughter.

Mrs. Robinson, mother of one son, was found dead near the 4700 block of Franklintown Road in Leakin Park on June 26. Police report she had been shot in the head.

Mrs. Robinson, who was two months pregnant was an active member of Gillis Memorial Christian Community Church. She attended Sunday School and worked faithfully with the Junior and Young People's Usher Board and was a member of the Young People's Choir.

Relatives said she was "a friendly and outgoing person."

Henry Robinson, 21 - year - old husband of Mrs. Robinson was arrested and charged with murder. The couple had been married for two years.

Funeral services for Mrs. Robinson were held July 1 at Gillis Memorial Christian Community Church. In addition to her mother, she is survived by her son, Henry Robinson, father, Daniel Taylor Sr., stepfather, James Daniels, two sisters and six brothers.

station and more than 3,000 people flowed through the radio station offices during the weekend to hand deliver their donations.

Radio station officials report that a sizeable amount of the donations came from the church community.

Although an exact figure had not been determined by AFRO presstime, officials said the goal had been reached.

FINALLY!! — Thomas Miller, 51, is one of 68 students who returned to school after a number of years to receive his diploma through the state's Adult External High School Diplomas Program. (AFRO Photo by Mark Gail)

Graduates receive degrees through special program

Thomas Miller along with 67 other students received their long awaited diplomas. For many of them, it was a long wait... but finally the day came.

These graduates who range in age from 18 to 73 were part of a special state-wide program, the Adult External High School Diploma Program.

Graduation ceremonies were held June 28 at Southwestern High School, one of four locations to house the program in the state.

Thomas Miller, 51, who spoke on behalf of the class, stated, "You're never too old to learn. And never tell yourself that because you're older, have a family and a job that you can't go back to school."

The External Diploma Program, unlike the GED classes, emphasize one - to - one instruction and individual learning. Students are also given credit for prior knowledge and experience.

Persons in the program, who average 35 to 45 years of age, usually spend eight months to a year studying before they receive their diploma, according to Mary Pat Justice who is director of the program. The program was initiated in 1978 in Montgomery County and later started in Baltimore in 1979.

"Our program is not timed and fits the lifestyle of the older person," said Ms. Justice. "We recognize life skills and our program is based on the idea that people have a certain amount of minimal experience."

Ms. Justice reported that 50 percent of the graduates have already registered for college this fall and some have already earned college credits.

The graduates include: Harold Alexander, Louise Bailey, Genevieve Ball, Una Benton, Laura Bonds, Pauline Brogden, Peggy Brooks, Mary Louise Brown, Marie Byrd.

Constance Clements, Donald Critzer, Jasmine Dell, Lena Edwards, Dorothy Ervin, David Glenn, Roberta Goodwyn, Genevieve Gorman, Lance C. Griffin, Lena Harris, Christine Isaac.

Augustine Isabelle, Martin Jacobs, Elisworth K. Johnson, Leslie Johnson, Nancy Keeny, Ima Jean Kramer, Barbara J. Lewis, Gwendolyn B. Little, Lillie P. Lulie.

Fannie E. Mackey, Edwin Matthai, Thomas F. Miller, Carita T. Mills, Brenda Moseley, Ruth Owens, Delores E. Parks, Lucy L. Randolph, Barbara Riley, Walter Robertson, Audrey J. Royster.

Earl M. Russell, Jean A. Russell, Barry H. Spencer, Marie Stuchinsky, Sarah O. Synder, Joanne Thompson, Gregory F. Truitt, Mary F. Turner, Beuleh M. Wilbur.

Celebration held for crossburning bill

By James M. Abraham
AFRO Staff Writer

"At long last a semblance or modicum of sanity is about to be turned loose in the state of Maryland," announced Rev. Marion Bascom, head of the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance Tuesday night.

What Bascom was referring to was a state law which makes the burning of religious symbols a felony, the first of its kind enacted in Maryland.

Bascom was speaking at a special celebration day, organized by the Alliance and the Committee on Legislative Concerns, a political interest group organized by Mason Grandmaster Samuel Daniels.

On hand Tuesday at the Masonic Temple on Lanvale St. were the two sponsors of the bill, Dels. Isaiah Dixon and Frank Conaway; and state Sen. Clarence Mitchell, who watched a similar bill he authored go down to defeat in the 1965 General Assembly session.

"Can you hear me, Mr. Imperial Wizard," shouted Del. Dixon "this bill should be a message loud and clear to those who terrorize our brothers and sisters."

"This is the greatest day in the history of Maryland," said Conaway. He thanked Dixon for inviting him to co-sponsor the bill, and told those assembled that the success of the effort showed that "we did the job you sent us down there to do."

According to Conaway, House members endorsed an abbreviated version of the bill, which would have stripped it of its felony clause.

"I asked for a roll call vote," he recalled, "and told them that I wanted the citizens of the state to see who was for cross-burning and who was against it."

Sen. Mitchell issued a call for blacks to "get back to the streets again." If you don't think that it's time for us to march again, then you're not thinking."

But the program was not filled with speeches alone. The choir of St. John AME church performed, and so did soloist Mary Conaway, wife of the delegate. Damito Jo gave a rendition of the COPE '83 theme song, "The Color of Your Skin Makes No Difference.

The bill makes the burning of any religious symbol a felony, and was enacted in response to a wave of cross-burnings which have swept the state during the past two years.

A chart prepared by the Committee on Legislative Concerns lists 36 cross-burnings during a six-month period beginning January 1 of this year.

The program was moderated by Rev. Benjamin Foust.

The Champ

City's 'littlest fighter' makes his debut

THE LITTLEST RUNNER — Calvin Alphonso Johnson, dubbed "Champ" by the AFRO, seemed unconcerned when we visited him this week at Johns Hopkins Neonatal Intensive Care Unit. Baby, born 22 weeks prematurely, weighs about 1 pound, and if he survives, will be the smallest baby that has ever survived at the hospital. (AFRO Photo by Mark Gail)

Officially, his name is Calvin Alphonso Johnson...but we're going to call him "Champ."

Champ was born about 22 weeks too early on June 9 at Johns Hopkins Hospital. At a mere one pound, he will be the smallest baby who has ever survived at Hopkins should he make it... and everybody, from nurses to family...thing that he will.

Housed comfortably in an incubator at Hopkins' neonatal intensive care unit, Champ doesn't appear to be struggling...except when he gets tired of being in one position.

"He crawls around," said nurse Marcia Rubenstein. "He tries to crawl out."

Wearing a little hat to help him maintain his body heat, Champ is hooked up to machines that monitor his heart and his breathing, and gets fed continuously through a tube.

His mother, Gina, told us that she is sure he will survive, and said that she has always only wanted just one child.

"This is it," she said, smiling. "I know he's going to make it. He's just fought too hard."

Gina said that she was in labor for about ten hours at home but that she didn't know it. When the cramping became too bad, she finally went to Hopkins, where doctors told her her child was on its way.

She was frightened at first, she said, but after a few days, when she could see how hard he was fighting to live, she relaxed a little.

The birth of Champ coincided with the birth of triplets who were born in Washington, D.C. and rushed to Hopkins after doctors staved off a ter doctors staved off the premature births for a while by use of a new drug called Ritodrene.

The drug, only recently approved by the Federal Drug Administration (FDA) is used in specific cases, most often those pregnancies involving multiple births.

Doctors are reluctant to use the drug too frequently, and maintain that conditions must be very specific in order for it to be prescribed.

Those conditions apparently were not present in Gina, who said she was not on any drugs during her pregnancy. The only condition that was obvious...was that Champ was ready to make his mark on the world.

We'll be rootin' for you, Champ.
