Mrs. Lula Cager retired teacher dies at home

Funeral services for Lula Cager Shaw, 70, were held July 30 at Union Baptist Church. Burial was in Woodlawn Cemetery.

Mrs. Shaw, of the 2100 block Presbury St., died July 27 at her home. A native of Edgefield S. C., she was a Baltimore resident for more than 45 years.

She retired as an elementary school teacher from School 25 in 1971. Mrs. Shaw attended high school in Washington, D. C. After graduation she was a student at Minor Normal School, now D. C. Teacher's College, where she graduated in 1927.

She received a bachelors of science degree from Morgan State College in the late 1940's.

A member of the Maryland State Retired Teachers Association, Mrs. Shaw also was a member of the National Association of Negro Business and Professional Women, Inc.,

Mrs. Shaw was a member of Union Baptist Church more than 45 years where she was active in the church's Gertrude Neal Circle.

She is survived by a son, Calvin Cager; a daughter, Darlean Cager Williams of Baltimore; four step-children, Larry Harrington of California; John Poe of California; Norman Poe of Philadelphia and Sarah McPhatter of Wagram, N.C.; two brothers, John Mundy of Detroit and Booker Mundy of New York; one sister, Viola Lilly of New York and a granddaughter, Tracey Williams of Baltimore.

false statements and documents that were submitted to the two federal agencies

In addition, the two are charged with submitting fraudulent income tax returns for 1976 and 1977. Southerland also was charged with making a false representation to the IRS.

Charges against Southerland carry maximum penalties of 41 years in prison and $80,000 in fines. Maximum penalties against Ms. Moore carry 39 years in prison and $75,000 in fines.

The indictment also included charges that:

Southerland and Ms. Moore used the records and funds of the Virginia College to obtain benefits for Southerland's sons, Victor and Thyron Levi.

Enrollment figures of the college were misrepresented to maintain a certain level of participation in federal student aid programs. The indictment alleges that in 1975 the school reported on an application to participate in financial aid in an enrollment of 258 students, when student records showed 93 students. And allegedly in 1976 reported 270 students, when there were 113 students on college records, and reported in 1977, there were 251 students when college records showed 76 students.

The two made payments listed in the records as loan repayments to Southerland's wife, Sophronia, totaling $6,000, "knowing that Sophronia Southerland was not entitled to any such loan repayments."

Southerland became president of Virginia College and Seminary in 1967, and in 1972 the two schools were split into Virginia College and Virginia Seminary after the school's boards decided federal student-loan money was needed to continue operations.

Since religious institutions cannot qualify for federal student loans, only the college students could do so. Virginia College began getting aid from HEW during the 1972-73 academic year and continued until February 1980. The schools participated in four student aid programs: the National Direct Student Loan, College Work Study, Basic Educational Opportunity Grant and Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant.

Virginia College closed down in February 1980, shortly after federal investigators seized records in the investigation, which led to Monday's indictments.

The two schools shared a campus on Garfield Avenue. Seminary records also were taken because they were not filed separately. The Seminary reopened briefly the following fall and then closed again.

Ms. Moore had served as administrative assistant to Southerland, financial aid officer and fiscal officer at the college.

Although no arraignment date has been set, Judge James C. Turk indicated it may be Friday. U.S. Assistant Attorney Faye Ehrenstamm, who will prosecute the case, said: An arraignment date usually is set within 10 days of an indictment, U.S. Attorney John S. Edwards said. He said the trail date usually falls within 70 days of an arraignment.

The indictments were the result of more than a year-long investigation by six federal agencies, primarily the IRS and HEW. Edwards said Monday the investigation was lengthy because of the "voluminous records" that "had to be traced."

Foundation gives $25,000 for homes

The board of directors of the Community Foundation of Greater Washington has made a $25,000 grant to Associated Catholic Charities, Archdiocese of Washington, for renovation of three residences for group homes for low and moderate income District senior citizens.

These Christian Communities Group Homes are on the grounds of the D.C. Office on Aging's Washington Center for Aging Services and will be managed by Associated Catholic Charities as part of the city's Senior Service Network.

Previous Community Foundation grants to projects to serve the elderly include those to the D.C. Office on Aging, Iona House, and the National Center for Black Aged. A tax-exempt public foundation, the Community Foundation of Greater Washington receives and distributes funds from local citizens and local and national corporations and foundations It receives its basic operating support from the United Way of the National Capital Area and is involved in supporting social services, the arts, equal justice, medical care, education, and community betterment.

The Washington Center for Aging Services is a 146-bed intermediate nursing care center, operated under a contract with the city. The Senior Service Network is a project of the D.C. Office on Aging, which coordinates public and private services so that each person who enters the system will be referred for all needed services

Christian Temple Faith sponsors revival services

Members of Christian Temple Faith Church, Reisterstown Road and Garrison Blvd., are now making plans for their annual Vacation Bible School and out door tent revival services to be held during the month of August.

Vacation Bible school classes will be held at the church Aug. 10-21 from 9:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. with a free lunch served to the children.

The small church with less than 200 members will have old fashion preaching and teaching, miracle night prayer for the sick, crusade choirs singing and Michael Patterson, from Guyana, South America as their guest speaker from Aug. 2-8.

The Rev. Izell Crump is pastor of the church. A member of the church told the AFRO: "We ppurchased the tent and chairs and we will not be under the tent to make money, but to talk about being born again."

Patterson is the son of the former mayor of New Amesterdam Guyana.

He is a graduate of the Assemblies of God Bible College. He is the founder of two churches. He now produces a daily radio and television outreach program. Crusades have been held as the effort to reach souls for Christ remain top priority in Patterson's life.

Eddie F. Southerland will be the guest speaker at the revival services begining Aug. 9. Evangelist Southerland is noted for his biblical scholarship and unique presentation of the gospel message.

Ex Va. Seminary head enters innocent plea

ROANOKE (UPI) — The key-president of the Virginia Seminary and College and his administrative assistant have pleaded innocent to charges of tax violations and conspiracy to misapply more than $73,000 in federal student aid.

U.S. District Judge James Turk has set Oct. 26 as a trial date for McCarthy Southerland and aide Janice Moore. They declined comment after their arraignment.

An indictment charges that Ms. Moore helped Southerland fake school accounts to pay his own expenses as well as those of two sons. They are charged with using the school's records "to conceal, hide or disguise" misapplication of funds

About trash payola

Mrs. Maggie Quille, president of the Druid Heights Action Association, Inc. and advisor to AFRO Clean Block was very upset when a daily newspaper expose showed a white trash collector, Benjamin Wortman, accepting $5 from a Korean grocery store owner, Mun Sun Moon, 549 Presstman Street.

Mrs. Quille says the same collectors have been in their area since about 1947 and she does not believe that the collector asked for any money.

She also noted that with stores on every corner in Druid Heights, AFRO Clean Blockers are concerned because many merchants put out more trash than the collectors are supported to take and many do not hire their own private trash collectors as they are supposed to do.

They either beg the collectors to take the excess or it is just left to clog the alleys and the sidewalks.

Seton Hill- Have always wondered why our AFRO parking lot dumpster seemed overfilled with garbage even though this newspaper has no restaurant and uses a trash compactor. Trash from our offices are bailed and the paper uses a private collector.

Caught one the AFRO's white neighbor's dumping his garbage in the dumpster and inquired why he didn't buy a metal trash can.

He was sheepish but also imparted the information that on a recent Saturday night, he watched a truck (He said from Lexington Market) dumping garbage in the same AFRO dumpster.

Druid Hill Avenue- The other night a neighbor living on Druid Hill watched a truck pull into the alley and proceed to dump a truck load of trash into the just cleaned yard and alley. Clean Blockers called the police and so many called, police actually responded and made the trucker put all the trash back on his truck.

The moral of this tale is, if you have an AFRO Clean Block and if you get to know your neighbors thru weekly meetings, you can stop people from other areas dumping trash in your neighborhood.

Exeter Street—The Flag House Apartments on Exeter Street, where they have been trying to get their AFRO Clean Block together, report that merchants in the 1100 blk of Lombard Street are putting their trash and garbage including rotten fish in their dumpsters.

A Sub Shop, Bell's Carryout, S & N Funland and Sam's have been cited by the Captain, Ms Gretta Rhodes.

Here is another case where the merchants are supposed to have metal cans or dispose of their trash properly thru city collections or their own private collector.

In hot weather, residents on Exeter Street can't sleep for the smell.

Al Bumbry, star of the Orioles, delighted his fans at AFRO Clean Block meeting. Early Birds received autographs and a few claimed kisses. The first persons in line were Ezekill and Mary Woodruff, Kevin Lewis, Francine Lambirth, Charlene Vandiver, Sylvia Thomas, Karen Nelson and Selma Gill.

Parkview Community Clean Block Festival

The Parkview Community residents and friends are sponsoring their 2nd Annual Festival, Saturday, August 1 from Noon to 8 p.m. in Druid Hill Park at the McCulloh Street entrance.

They are sponsoring AFRO Clean Blocks in the 2700, 2800 and 2900 blks of Parkwood. The area is bounded by Francis, Auchentoroly, Reisterstown, Whittier. Miss Olabisi James, 669-0747 is president and assisting is Mrs. Sadiqua Nichols, 542-7050.

Mis James says that the aim of the Festival is for community residents, businesses and friends unite to show pride in their area. The booths will raise funds for maintenance of the blocks.

There will be entertainment, various food booths, new and nearly new clothes, face painting, arts and crafts and the showing of movies by Lloyd Barnes.

Entertainment includes Antwan Smith, comedian; Parkview Singers and Dancers.

AFRO Clean Block Captains and advisors are: Neal Gaines, Captain of 2700 and 2800 Parkwood Ave; and Curtis Wright, Captain; Bara Brooks, Co-Captain and Thomas Tucker, advisor of 2900 Parkwood Ave.

Garrison Avenue Flea Market

The 3600 Blk W. Garrison Ave. is participating in the AFRO Clean Block for the first time.

According to Ms Margaret Woodson, advisor, they have held three car wash activities to raise money for improvement to their blocks.

They will hold a bake sale and Flea Market, Saturday, August 1 from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Super Pride Store, 3718 W. Belvedere Ave. Funds will be used to take their children on a trip.

The residents in the AFRO Clean Block campaign have held clean-up days and cleaned their streets and back alleys.

They are grateful to the parents and children who are working and giving valued support. They also thank the Park Heights Area Corp.

Marva Hughes is captain; Yvette Murray, co-captain; and Frances Jackson, secretary.
