—Angel imposters

Cole and Jackson said they had received several reports, including information from the police, that a group of four or five men, wearing clothing similar to the Angels' distinctive uniform of white T-shirts, red berets and fatigue-style trousers, have been posing as Guardian Angels.

The imposters have been seen in the Harborplace area asking people for money and approaching women, as well as, staging patrols along the city's streets, they said.

Both Cole and Jackson were emphatic in their declarations that they are the only two Guardian Angels in Baltimore. The Angels are a non-profit organization and funds are not sought by soliciting money from people on the streets, they said.

"There also will be no Angels patrolling the streets for another three or four months" until a session to train Baltimore's first group of 50 Angels has been completed, Jackson said.

Cole and Jackson urged people to beware of imposters and said they are trying to "nip (the imposter's activities) in the bud."

In Washington, D.C., however, apparently another group of imposters were trying to nip Sliwa's activities in the bud.

Since Sliwa founded the New York Angels chapter two years ago, 22 chapters have been organized in such cities as Cleveland, Miami, Atlanta, Denver and Philadelphia. He told district police he was there to organize a new Angels chapter when he was attacked.

U.S. Park Police said Sliwa was found at about 5 a.m. Tuesday near the Lincoln Memorial "soaking wet."

Sliwa said he had been walking through one of the district's main drug and prostitution sections. He said when he neared the Washington Monument, about five blocks away, four men emerged from a dark-colored van and identified themselves as police officers.

Sliwa said the men told him a woman had been sexually assaulted near the monument and they were taking Sliwa in because he fit the description of the man who committed the assault.

"They jumped out of the van with their pieces (guns) showing, pushed me up against a wall and frisked me ... read me my rights," he said.

"Then they handcuffed me and threw me down on the floor of the van. It became apparent they weren't taking me back to the station."

Sliwa said one of the men was very abusive. The man pointed a gun to Sliwa's head and slowly pulled the trigger 12 or 14 times, he said.

"They told me I was a big mouth ... just a little punk. They said they don't want no Guardian Angels nowhere," he said.

Sliwa said the men tied his hands with his necktie and his feet were bound with Sliwa's Guardian Angel T-shirt. He said he was later thrown into the Potomac River.

He said he regained consciousness in the river's shallow water on the Virginia side of the Arlington Memorial Bridge.

He then walked to the Lincoln Memorial grounds and called the police. Sliwa was taken to Georgetown University Hospital by ambulance where he was treated and released, a hospital spokesman said.

—Black colleges

Statistics reveal that blacks constitute 5 percent of the faculty of the University of Maryland, Baltimore County, three percent at the University of Maryland College Park, two percent at Towson State University and 0 percent at St. Mary's.

In contrast, she stated that the proportions of white faculty members at predominantly black institutions were much higher. Morgan has a 25 percent white faculty, Coppin has 31 percent and Bowie has 5 percent.

"White students attending public colleges and universities in Maryland are never similarly deprived of self-reflective role models among the professors and administrators irrespective of whether the institution in which they happen to be enrolled is predominantly black or white," said Mrs. Harvey.

Dr. Oakley Saunders, who served on the Rosenberg Commission and was a recent member of the State Board for Higher Education, stated that he opposed any closures, mergers or consolidations of schools because there is not sufficient evidence that such action will enhance the quality of education.

"This action will only phase out the traditional black institutions and will not make any significant reductions in costs," said Saunders.

He added, "It's wrong for anybody to assume that we're so concerned about saving Morgan that we don't care about the other black schools in the state. If we just fight for Morgan there probably won't be any black institution."

Enolia P. McMillan, president of the Baltimore NAACP and a member of the Morgan board of regents, stated, "The myth that whites automatically improve a black institution must be erased. This has been the basis for such mergers. And black colleges have been taking a licking."

Other persons to speak before the committee during its two-day hearings were Dr. Hilbert Stanley, president of the Alliance of Black School Educators; Dr. Ernest Hammond, chairman of the Faculty Advisory Committee for the State Board of Higher Education and Rev. Leroy Pitts, pastor of First Baptist Church. Administrators of the various schools are scheduled to speak before the committee on Aug. 19 in Annapolis.

The other areas include preventive health medicine and a miscellaneous division.

The direct allocation to the city for the maternal and child care health services means that the city won't have to compete with other cities for block grant funds, as had been feared.

Friedlander explained that the state had been particularly careful in its Medicaid system, since Maryland has a high unemployment rate and therefore many participants in the program.

She said that Maryland was one of six states to escape severe Medicaid funding reductions because of cost containment. All states, she said, will begin feeling the effects of the budget slashes and block grant allocation systems by Oct.1, the beginning of the fiscal year for the federal government.

Larry Young elected v.p. of state solons

Del. Larry Young (D-38) was elected to a two year term as vice president of the 3,000 member Democratic State Legislators of the United States, during the second annual meeting of the group that was held concurrent with the annual conference of the National Conference of State Legislators, July 27-31 in Atlanta.

In commenting on his election, Del. Young said, "I am honored and excited about my new responsibility. Although some may be surprised, I am not surprised by the election of a black legislator to the number two position in the organization because the black community has always been in the forefront of the Democratic party and true Democratic policies.

"I intend not only to provide a vehicle for representing the concerns of black legislators, but for representing the concerns of the black community as a whole."

The purpose of the one year old Democratic state legislators is to encourage state legislative involvement in the Democratic party, foster interstate communication and exchange among Democratic state legislators.

Also, adopt policy positions on national issues, participate in the development of a Democratic party platform and strengthen the Democratic caucuses in each of the state legislators houses in the U. S.

Serving under Dr. Richard Hodes, speaker of the Florida House of Representatives, Del. Young's responsibilities as vice president will include serving on the organization's executive committee, serving as acting president in the president's absence and working with committee chairmen.

In addition, Young will be heavily involved in making policy for the Democratic state legislators of the U. S.

Young is a second term member of the Maryland House of Delegates and serves on the environmental matters committee. His major legislative concerns are health, energy, community development and insuring adequate state aid to black institutions.

Otis Warren Company strives for excellence

In 1970 Otis Warren Jr., took over the business that was founded by his father, Otis Warren Sr. in 1952. The business was small but offered competent, honest service to the people. The same honesty is found today even though the firm has increased in size and scope of services.

"We at Otis Warren and Company are totally committed to the public. We place emphasis on consistently good quality of services rather than on quantity," said Otis Warren Jr.,

The thriving real estate company employs 66 sales persons, of which 40 percent of the 20 full time agents are members of the Million Dollar Club.

As a minority businessman, Warren strives to totally enrich the growth of its associates. With over $40,000 worth of in-house training material, the Warren Associates, who previously were educators, social workers, computer specialists, economists, and managers, have and are continuing to achieve their highest potential.

The company has two office facilities, six full time personnel, three attorneys, an accountant and a student assistant.

For the last six months, Otis Warren and Company has serviced an average of 41 families a month. The company recently started a massive media campaign to inform citizens about the city residential loan program.

Warren says everyone should have an opportunity to become homeowners and the city is providing a great opportunity to take advantage of the low interest financing programs.
