Lower summer and winter fuel bills

Washington-area homeowners can lower both summer and winter bills by following suggestions from PEPCO energy conservation experts.

"Installing home insulation, weatherstripping and caulking, and storm windows can save up to 30 percent of the energy many PEPCO customers would need to heat their homes this winter, " said Eric Oganesoff, manager of Residential Energy Services. "And many times, insulation can pay for itself through fuel savings in less than seven years."

For customers who decide to use a contractor to install cellulose, rock wook, or fiber glass insulation in the attic, floor, or wall cavity, here are some insulation tips which PEPCO recommends:

The insulation industry rates various insulation materials in terms of their ability to resist heat flow. This measure, called an "R-value," allows you to compare the effictiveness of different insulation materials. The higher the R-value, the g reater the resistance to heat flow.

The Potomac Electric Power Company recommends an R-value for attics, R-19 for floors, and R11 for walls in your home. It is important to think in terms of total R-value, not inches. For example, to get an R-value of 30, you would need 13 inches of fiberglass loose fill, but only eight inches of cellulose.

When buying insulation, tell the contractor or supplier the R-value you want. Ask the contractor to let you see the chart indicating the number of bags of loose fill or inches of batts needed to cover the area to be insulated in your home at the R-value you specify.

Try to be present when the work is done to assure that the insulation is installed properly.

Make sure that the material used to insulate your home meets Federal specification. If it does, it will be clearly ordered. Be certain that the contractor uses all of what you ordered.

Check to insure that the insulation in the attic is distributed evenly if loose fill is used. And no insulation should cover or come within three inches of heat sources, including recessed light fixtures.

I have returned from New York with Miss Kimberly Brooks attending the National Pageant for Hal Jackson's Talented Teens at the Waldorf Astoria, New York. Miss Brooks left with me on August 1 for final days to compete among 33 talented teens across the country. She returned wearing the National Crown and sash of Miss Talented Teen International. We won! Yes, she brought victory back to Maryland. It was an exciting and glamorous trip. You know what New York has to offer in the way of the arts, plenty of Broadway plays and shows.

Just to mention one item on our busy itinerary. Mr. Jackson, National sponsor, took State Queens and chaperones, sponsors to see the fabulous Broadway production Duke Ellington's Sophisticated Ladies, held at Lunt - Fontanne Theater. It was simply fabulous. If you haven't seen it, head to the Big Apple and don't miss it. It brings memories back to the old Apolla Theater, "Echoes of Harlem."

The cast played roles superbly. It was such a treat to chat with two of my daughter's friends, both were stars in the Broadway Hit. "The Wiz." Gregg Burge, who played the role of the Scarecrow and featured in Bojangles and T. A. Stephens, who gave a party for Hari Dam (my daughter) before her departure for Germany to teach and perform. T. A. (Todd) played the role of the Wing Monkey and one of the leading dancers along with my son - in - law Seri Sat Nam Singh in The Wiz. Leading lady was Judith Jamison. Judith also a friend of Hari Dam (Rae) from the Alvin Ailey Company.

I would like to thank all of the many fine persons who called to congratulate us for bringing a national winner back to our state of Maryland. There were many, many, many.

Hints For Homemakers/Inez Kaiser

Getting the Signal means war on garlic, onions

DEAR INEZ: I am almost 30 years old and would like to get married soon. For some reason men seem to avoid me after the first dinner date. We enjoy talking to each other during the evening, but that's all. They don't call me after that. There must be a reason why this keeps on happening. What do you think?
—DESPERATE SINGLE

DEAR DESPERATE SINGLE: Have you thought of changing your mouthwash? My guess is that bad breath caused by eating highly spiced foods may be your No. 1 problem. And if I'm right, there's a sure way to solve your problem.

Just start using SIGNAL mouthwash today. You will be able to notice the difference right away. SIGNAL fights strong mouth odors—even those caused by spicy foods like onions and garlic.

Most salads, pizza, spaghetti and many other dishes are highly seasoned. Very often the best-tasting foods leave the most offensive odors in your mouth—especially when we come in close contact with others.

Like kissing your date goodnight, which is one of the closest situations you can get into. It is also a very sensitive one. No man, in fact no one, wants to tell you that your mouth odor turns him off. Even the young teenage women are "getting the signal" these days.

You will like SIGNAL's minty taste once you've tried it. It gives you fresher, cleaner breath, as proved by clinical tests.

SIGNAL mouthwash will help you get your man before your next birthday comes around. And it will help carry you past your first date and on to many more. Try it and see for yourself.

HOW TO GET TEETH THEIR WHITEST

IT NEVER OCCURRED to me that people remember television commercials as well as they do until I heard some women recently talking about seeing Rita Moreno's smile in a PEPSODENT toothpaste commercial.

As a celebrity she's always in the public eye and has to be concerned about the appearance of her teeth. But it's equally important for everyone to have white teeth.

Just remember that PEPSODENT toothpaste will get your teeth their whitest. And it is low in abrasion, too.

Pepsodent

All of us want to have a pleasant smile that shows only the whitest possible teeth. So if you want your teeth their whitest, brush your teeth daily with PEPSODENT toothpaste.

You should also take advantage of PEPSODENT's current "1¢ Sale." You can receive a coupon for a free tube of family or super size PEPSODENT by sending in two proofs of purchase from either size, one penny, and the official "1¢ Sale" certificate from take-one pads in participating stores.

And every time you smile, think of how PEPSODENT toothpaste whitens your teeth.
