Brown Memorial moves to new church March 7

Members of Brown's Memorial Baptist Church, 2000 N. Fulton Ave., will move to their new church at 3215 W. Belvedere Ave. on Sunday, March 7. The church has purchased the former Arlington Presbyterian Church.

Brown's Memorial was founded in 1932 as the Watch Your Step Tabernacle, when the Rev. Ernest Brown was pastor. In 1951, it was incorporated under its present name by Dr. George E. Vanderford and moved from Gilmor Street to the 2000 block of Fulton Ave., where it has served the area for 31 years.

In recent years, the church has out grown the Fulton Avene building and the members have been looking for a larger facility.

The Rev. Douglas I. Miles is pastor of Brown's Memorial and since he has served as pastor, the church has purchased the church and education building on Belvedere through the Presbytery of Baltimore.

The last services will be held at the Fulton Avenue church on March 7, 8:30 a.m. and the Rev. Dr. Alfred C. D. Vaughn, pastor of Grace Memorial Baptist Church will be the speaker.

At 10:30 a.m. a motorcade will make its way to the Belvedere Avenue church and services will be held at 11 a.m. At 5 p.m. the Slippery Rock College Gospel Choir will be presented in concert.

The new church has a seating capacity of 1,000 in the main sanctuary, full lower auditorium, 20 classrooms, gymnasium, a suite of offices, nursery and other features. The church also has its own parking lot. Delmo Harris is chairman of the Deacon Board and Claude David is chairman of the Board of Trustees.

Archdiocese relocates offices

This is a "moving week" for many of the offices and agencies of the Archdiocese of Washington — including the Office of the Archbishop.

The Archdiocesan offices located in northwest at 1719 and 1721 Rhode Island Avenue will move into the new Archdiocesan Pastoral Center, located at 5001 Eastern Avenue in northeast. The Center, now completing renovation, is the former Seminary of the Oblates of St. Francis deSales. The building will house all the offices and agencies of the Archdiocese of Washington, serving some 131 parishes and 400,000 Catholics in the District of Columbia and Montgomery, Prince George's, Calvert, Charles and St. Mary's Counties in Maryland.

Among the offices moving this week into the Center are the Archbishop's office, the Chancery, and the offices of Communications, Hispanic Catholics, Personnel and Operations, Personnel for Priests, Vocations, and Social Development, the Marriage Tribunal, and the Offices of the Secretaries for the Clergy, Parish Life and Worship, Religious Women and Social Concerns.

The Development Development and Finance Offices have been operating out of the Center since September. Remaining offices and to the Eastern Avenue site over the next six to eight weeks.

Besides office space, the Archdiocesan Pastoral Center will have seminar and meeting rooms, a 200-seat chapel, cafeteria and dining facilities.

The Pastoral Center will also serve as the Episcopal residence. An upstairs portion of the building is being converted into an apartment for the Archbishop and his priest secretaries. Work on the Archbishop's residence is expected to be completed in April.

In commenting on the first "moving days" into the Center, the Most Rev. James A. Hickey, Archbishop of Washington, said the Pastoral Center is designed to serve the Archdiocese more efficiently and more effectively.

S.C. College on target with State plan

ORANGEBURG, SC — A year after the federal Department of Education notified the state of South Carolina that it was in violation of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 in its state-supported system of higher education, South Carolina State College continues to be a leader in implementing the negotiated and accepted plan, as applied to that institution. South Carolina State College emerged from the plan with several strengthening programs. A major program was the initiation of a new doctoral program, an Ed.D. and a specialist degree program, the Ed.S. in Educational Administration.

The newly appointed director, Dr. Isaiah Reid, formerly of the University of South Carolina, is charged with implementing this overall project.

"I view this responsibility as a challenge," said Dr. Reid. "The Ed.D. and Ed.S. programs at the college will be highly rigorous; designed to give the student the best preparation possible in education administration. The curriculum will utilize the latest organizational theory, strong research and a background of curricula theory. A student completing this kind of quality program will be better equipped to do an outstanding job in our schools," he concluded.

REGISTRATION AT S.C. STATE — Ibraim M. Salama, left, associate professor of management and general business administration, discusses requirements and course offerings for the new programs in marketing and economics with Mrs. Moner Nassri. Mrs. Nassri, who is majoring in general business administration, is a native of the Syrian Arab Republic. Salama is the marketing area coordinator at the college.

Students will be admitted into specialist degree and doctoral programs in the fall of 1983, he indicated.

The institutional plan includes funds for strengthening the academic program by providing faculty in specific areas.

In the business administration area Dr. Enoch Beraho and Dr. Kwadwo Bawuah were appointed assistant professors of economics and Macgorine A. Cassell was appointed an instructor of business administrarion.

This department, which added marketing and economics degree programs in the fall of '81, is preparing the groundwork to become a School of Business Administration. The department has the largest enrollment of any department on the campus.

In the Department of Health and Physical Education, Dr. Barry Frishberg joined the faculty as assistant professor.

Dr. William C. Henderson became assistant professor of history and humanities in the Department of Political Science and History.

Under the programs of the Department of Natural Sciences, Dr. Rodney McCormick was appointed assistant professor of physics and education and Dr. John McLeod as assistant professor of chemistry.

Mark T. Weaver joined the faculty as an instructor of modern languages and humanities.

The college began a degree program in computer science in the fall of 1981. Paula S. Whitmire joined the faculty as an instructor of mathematics and computer science under the plan.

Dr. Jacqueline Sjubal, who holds the faculty position of assistant professor of education, is also Director of the Academic Planning and Evaluation at the College. She assists in the planning, developmental and evaluative functions of the academic affairs unit.

The college found that the demand for engineering technology students was so great that additional staff was added to the School of Industrial Education and Engineering Technology in response to this need.

Personnel added to strengthen this school's faculty included the appointment of Hamed Javad and Uttam Mukhopadhyay, both as assistant professors of electrical engineering technology. In addition, Gus J. Roberts was added to the strengthening faculty program as assistant professor of civil engineering technology.

"We feel that the addition of these highly qualified faculty and the new programs is a giant step in implementing the objectives delineated in the S.C. Plan for Equity and Equal Opportunity in the Public Colleges and Universities," said Dr. Carl Carperter, vice president for academic affairs at the college.

"Quality programs attract good students. We anticipate that by strengthening both our programs and faculty we are providing our students with a greater opportunity to become leaders in their chosen careers," he added.

A&T to play key role in Int'l Trade Conference

GREENSBORO, N.C. — A&T State University, already deeply involved in a number of international projects, will join the Greensboro Chamber of Commerce and several area colleges in sponsoring an international trade conference early next month.

The meetings scheduled for March 3-4 in the Four Seasons Holiday Inn-Four Seasons Convention Center, will be focused on providing businessmen and other interested persons with detailed information about international trade. Also participating will be Winston-Salem State University and Bennett College.

Dr. Edward B. Fort, chancellor of A&T, said the conference is a prime example of A&T's efforts to promote closer ties to the business community.

Dr. Edward Fort, Chancellor of A&T State University, remarked, "This is an exceptionally important conference, with sponsorship and participation of both federal and state Departments of Commerce.

The conference is an excellent addition to our continuing program in international affairs, and affords us another opportunity to demonstrate A&T's commitment to the important segment of the business community with interest in foreign trade.

The conference also represents the strong ties between sponsoring institutions and both the Chamber of Commerce and our business community. We are looking forward to cultivating this already profitable relationship even more in the future."

A number of persons prominent in the areas of exports and foreign trade will participate in the conference.

Sessions begin on Wednesday, March 3, with a dinner at Four Seasons and a keynote address by Thage Berggren, President and Chief Executive officer of Volvo White Truck Corporation.

On Thursday, March 4, sessions will run all day at Four Seasons, starting with a 9 a.m. panel discussion addressing current trends in international trade at national, state, and local levels, with experts on these areas as well as representatives from the Triad's major product 'groups wihi strong, export divisions.

Among the speakers will be Erskine Harkey, Executive Vice President for World Trade, First Union National Bank; Dr. Burleigh C. Webb, Dean, School of Agriculture, A&T State University; Joel New, District Director, U.S. Department of Commerce; Charles McKinney, Vice-President, Dixie Furniture Company, Robert Whitehead, Vice-President Measurement Group; and David DeCurtis, President, DeCurtis Trading Company.

Registration fee for the conference and dinner will be $30.00, and for the conference alone, $15.00. Pre-registration is encouraged. Those wishing to do so should contact Mrs. Rose Marie Smith, Greensboro Chamber, P.O. Box 3245, Greensboro, N.C. 27402, telephone (919) 275-8675. Mrs Smith also has information on accommodations for those wishing to stay at the Convention Center, where a limited number of rooms have been reserved. Those requiring accommodations should contact Mrs. Smith no later than February 25.

Founder's Day at Livingstone College

"Dreams and hard-work are what great institutions are built on," Dr. Marshall B. Bass, Corporate Director of Personnel Development for R.J. Reynolds Industries, asserted during the One Hundred and Twenty-Eighth anniversary of the birthday of Livingstone College founder, Dr. Joseph Charles Price.

Dr. Bass also received the Honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree. Honorary Doctor of Divinity degrees were awarded to Rev. Clarence H. Little, pastor of the St. Paul A.M.E. Zion Church, Cantonment, Florida and Rev. General Lee Scott, pastor of the St. Thomas A.M.E. Zion Church, Norfolk, Virginia during the obervance.

"Dream of things that will make our generation great, but more importantly dream of things that will have a positive effect on generations to come," he stated.

In establishing Livingstone College, Dr. Price saw the fulfillment of a great need, that of removing the veil of ignorance from all who sought a liberal education in a wholesome Christian setting.

Elaborating on his personal dreams and aspirations, the retired military officer stated "for our society to move forward, there is, and must continue to be a bit of the visionary and dream achiever in each and every one of us," he said.

"Despite these difficult economic times, we still manage to hear about success stories, if you stop and analyze such stories," he said "I think you will find many men and women like Dr. Price who deferred personal gratification to reach their goal."

Recognizing that February is Black History Month, Dr. Bass cited the accomplishments of Blanch Bruce, who was elected to the United States senate in 1841; Mary Bell, who became the first black woman in America to hold the position of president of a major broadcasting company; Arthur Lewis, a noted Princeton University professor who won the 1979 Nobel Peace Prize in Economic Science; and former Supreme Court Justice, Thurgood Marshall as persons who strived to make their dreams become reality.

"Perhaps most importantly," he stressed "a common element that ties most stories together is that truly successful people tend to make the lives of others around them better as a result of their success."

"Martin Luther King was one of our greatest Americans," Bass said, "when he expressed his vision, America understood the message and while there is still much of Dr. King's work still to be done, millions of people have benefited from his great vision."

Distinguished alumnus award

ORANGEBURG, SC— Two South Carolina State College Distinguished Alumnus Awards will be presented at the 86th Annual Founders' Day Program Sun., Feb. 28 at 4 p.m. One will be given to Porter L. Bankhead of Washington, DC, for Outstanding Achievement in Business and Aerospace; the other, to W. Melvin Brown of Charleston, SC., for Outstanding Achievement in Business and Defense.

The ceremony will take place in the Martin Luther King Jr. Auditorium and will feature ABC - TV newscaster, Max Robinson as the keynote speaker.

Bankhead, who is president of Systems and Applied Sciences Corporation, received a Bachelor of Science degree in mathematics from the college in 1963. Brown who is president of American Development Corporation, received his Bachelor of Science degree in science in 1956. Both men went on to earn master's degrees and to advanced studies.

Bankhead was commissioned a Second Lieutenant in the U.S. Army Artillery and after relief from active duty, was granted government service rating. He served as a mathematician with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration supporting Gemini and Apollo manned spaceflight programs.

In 1973 he formed a computer corporation to support technological expansion in development of complex software systems for commercial and strategic applications. His company provides extensive support to all the armed services and most federal agencies and participates, through problem analysis and solution, in building novel capabilities for defense preparedness. He serves as president of the company, now employing 1000 professionals.

Brown's firm is a defense manufacturing firm employing 300 people and has been listed in Black Enterprise's Top 100 Companies for the last five years. He is also vice president and majority stockholder of Recovery Systems Incorporated which holds patents on a waste recovery system.

Both men are active in their community and professional organizations.

Developmental Education Specialist

Dr. Charles Nelson, assistant professor of English at Livingstone College, has recently received certification as a "Developmental Education Specialist" from the Kellogg Institute for the Training and Certification of Developmental Educators.

Dr. Nelson was one of fourty - eight educators selected from across the United States to participate in the Kellogg Institute and its certification process during the 1981 - 82 academic year.

The Institute is the only one of its kind in the country offering training and certification to educational professionals who work with academically underprepared students on college campuses.

Each year, approximately fifty individuals participate in a summer training program followed by a semester's practicum in which participants implement new techniques on their home campuses.

Dr. Nelson was awarded certification as a result of his participation in the training program and completion of an implementation project at Livingstone College.

The certificate as "Developmental Education Specialist" is awarded through the Kellogg Institute in conjunction with Appalachian State University in Boone, North Carolina.

Dr. Nelson is married to Kathleen Nelson, an instructor in Chemistry at Livingstone College.

Pastor says goodbye

Rev. Joseph Johnson who served as pastor of Soldiers Memorial AME Zion Church in Salisbury for six - and - a - half years delivered his Farewell Sermon Sunday. A capacity crowd was present. Also a group of young people joined the church and two were baptized.

Rev. Johnson spoke on the five wise virgins and the five foolish virgins and he admonished his audience to be very sure at all times to have their vessels filled with oil and their lamps trimmed and burning lest they be like the foolish five who were found without oil when the bridegroom came and the door was shut. A very beautiful and inspiring message. Holy Communion was administered.

Sunday evening a reception was held at the church for Rev. and Mrs. Johnson. The reception was largely attended by members from various churches as well as the honorees members of Soldiers Memorial.

Tributes were paid the honorees by various organizations and groups.

Law School Directory

DURHAM, NC — As an assistant librarian at two law schools, Abayomi Moses heard the request from students for information about special programs at American law schools.

Experience taught him to wince; most of the information sought was available only by diligent research in each school's catalog.

No longer need law librarians wince. The Nigerian - born Moses, who holds his Master of Library Science degree from North Carolina Central University, has published the first directory, to the best of his knowledge, which brings together listings of special programs and courses from most of the 171 accredited law schools in the United States.

Moses' U.S. Law Schools: a directory of courses and other special programs available at the American Law Schools is now available from Sekoni Publishers, PO Box 150007, Durham, NC 27704.

Included in the directory are geographical and alphabetical listings of all U.S. Law Schools accredited by the American Bar Association, with standard information about degrees offered, academic and admissions requirements, applications, and so forth.

From 115 of the 171 schools, Moses received further information. He lists the special courses and programs the law students asked about: air law, mineral law, sports and entertainment law, poverty law, transportation law, and others.

He identifies the schools which offer advanced degrees in law, such as the LL. M. degree, and the specialty areas in which the degrees are offered, as taxation.

Joint degree programs are listed. Many schools offer joint undergraduate and professional degree programs (a bachelor's degree and a law degree), and others offer combinations of professional degrees or professional and graduate degrees. (Examples include joint law and medicine programs, and joint programs in law and educational administration.)

Overseas and exchange programs are listed, as are evening programs. Statistics on foreign student enrollment are included, along with information on special admission programs.

115 Years of Excellence

"Despite the continuing forecasts of doom for higher educational institutions, many colleges such as St. Augustine's not only survive, but they continue to defy the odds and survive with quality and dignity. Congratulations to President Robinson, alumni, faculty, staff and administration of St. Augustine's College for the tenacity you have demonstrated in keeping this institution open. And, at the same time maintaining a very special form of excellence."

These words echoed vibrantly from Dr. Margaret Seagears, Director of the External Relations Staff, Office of Postsecondary Education, Washington, DC, as she delivered the 115th Founders' Day Convocation address at St. Augustine's College.

She continued, "There is still an educational mystique within Black Colleges which balances knowing with being. One not only learns how to think creatively but how to share another person's burden, feel another person's pain, and engage in action to eliminate common conditions for social injury."

Dr. Seagears alluded to the historical significance of historically black colleges and universities throughout her address. She exclaimed "We need a sense of history to provide an accurate account of the accomplishments of a group to which one belongs, and to share in the unique kinship of a special bond of brother and sisterhood. History is the memory of human society."

The convocation program agenda included a prelude by Jack Biggers, college organist, and T. Curtis Mayo, artist in - residence. The invocation was given by the Rev. Ronald Fox, college chaplain.
