Rev. St. George Crosse meets with President Reagan Priscilla Fowlkes

The Rev. St. George Crosse, pastor of St. Matthews United Methodist Church, 416 E. 23rd St., is attending a luncheon today (Friday) with President Ronald Reagan at the White House.

The luncheon is in recognition of black church leaders for their service and commitment to black causes in their neighborhood. Rev. Crosse said that he will tell the president in no uncertain terms that black people are hurting.

He said, "The economy is hurting my people and parishioners. I will say to the president that I still support him and that I am praying for him and hoping that he turns the economy around real soon. I believe that cuts must be made across the board."

Rev. Crosse said he will also tell the president that "Exxon, and Gulf Oil must be cut as well as the wasteful social programs that have increased the dependency of black people on government programs.

"I will also tell the president that he has to help us to preserve our black colleges. I am an alumnus of Coppin, Morgan and the University of Maryland. I do not want them to turn into white institutions like Bowie State.

"I am going to let him know that he should keep his hands off of social security and there must be no reductions. I can see him cut the unrealistic raises that President Carter proposed but there must be no reductions for those who are on fixed incomes."

Rev. Crosse said, "The rich as well as the poor must sacrifice if the economy is to be rehabilitated. A bad economy always hurts the poor before it hurts the rich. Therefore, the President must get the economic to ship into shape."
