Are fleas a problem in your home?

FLEAS ARE PROBLEM IN CITY HOMES It is not uncommon to have problems with fleas inside homes this winter, according to th Baltimore City Health Department.

"Because of recent warm weather, flea breeding that would have slowed down in normal November weather did not decrease", explained James Woodford, Environmental Health Division, Baltimore City Health Department.

Fleas are parasites of animals and continue activity and reproduction throughout the year by laying eggs. Adult fleas are one-sixteenth of inch, dark brown or black with flattened bodies from side- to-side and are capable of jumping.

By sucking the blood from animals, including humans, adult fleas sustain themselves.

The following tips are for persons who suspect a flea problem:

1. Check pets frequently around the head, stomach, and hind legs for fleas. If fleas are found, approved insecticides in the form of shampoos, dips, and soaps should be used for animals.

Follow the manufacturer's instructions when applying or contact a veterinarian for flea control treatment.

2. Check the pet's bedding for fleas. If fleas are found, spray the pet's bedding with an appropriate insecticide.

3. Thoroughly vacum rugs, floors, furniture and pet's bedding to remov flea eggs just before applying an insecticide. A vacuum cleaner with a disposable bag should be used.

Immmediately following use, spray the bag with an insecticide and dispose of the bag.

4. Apply an approved insecticide in foggers or spray forms that are recommended for interior use. Read manufacturer's instructions carefully to obtain maximum benefit.

Insecticides can be purchased at hardware stores, pest control stores, and other retail stores. In cases of heavy infestation, th services of an exterminator may be needed.

:Some families have persistent flea problems because they do not dhere to all the necessary steps in eliminating the flea cycle," Woodford said.

Persons without pets may also experience flea infestation if stray animals seek protection under porches and in other structures. The flea eggs hatch and adult fleas are then carrid into homs where the reproduction cycle continues.

For additional advice, contact Vector Control, Baltimore City Health Department at 396-4411.
