Conference addresses A.M.E. Zion youth

By Kofi Owusu
AFRO Staff Writer

More than 400 youth, representing nearly 3,000 A.M.E. Zion churches worldwide, met for a four day conference in Arlington last week.

Hosted by Lomax A.M.E. Zion Church, the Rev. Louis Hunter pastor the National Christian Youth Council (NCYC) conference addressed the needs of the denomination's youth, age 16-24, and set forth ideas to get youth more involved in the church, and social service projects outside it.

Under the theme, "Unlimited Possibilities: Hearing the Call, Accepting the Commission," conference workshops provided direction to youth leaders so they might expand their contribution to their respective church districts.

Three A.M.E. Zion bishops who attended the conference, Bishop Cecil Bishop, Bishop Clinton Coleman, and host Bishop Charles Foggie, praised the youth for their living the Christian way, and challenged them to carry God's message to youth everywhere.

Dr. Laura A. Fleet, a professor at the Howard University School of Communications, delivered the keynote address at the annual awards dinner in the Crystal City Hyatt Regency Hotel Wednesday.

Fleet retold the story of David versus Goliath, and questioned whether today's youth were the modern day Davids they have the potential to be, she said.

David conquered the giant Goliath with the five stones of faith, courage, knowledge, skill and love, Fleet said. Armed with such weapons, anyone can conquer any foe, she added.

The university professor addressed the poor economic times, and urged those present to develop broad, widely applicable skills so as not to be caught unprepared for a changing world.

"Develop your leadership skills as well as your other skills, so you can lead instead of follow," Fleet said.

Bro. George McKain, 24, Ridgewood, NJ, who was elected president of the NCYC in August, said one of his primary concerns is to assure greater participation of overseas youth members, and to get youth more "action-oriented."

"We are planning to get more into service projects will benefit the church and the community at-large," McKain said.

The NCYC president said new programs he favors include rehabilitation ministries in prisons, re-entry programs, a pen pal program with overseas youth, and a similar porgram for convicts. Scouting will be also encouraged, McKain said.

To be continued are leadership training programs, and the youth council representation in the various districts. The NCYC is also the first black youth Young Christians for Global Justice, the youth subdivision of the World Council of Churches, McKain said, by joining last year.

Citing the goals of youth President McKain, Jarrett agreeed that "We're in a position to make the most impact ever."

Calling it like it is

Rollo blows his top

By James E. Nichols

My good friend Rollo told me the other day that he was sick and tired of hearing some women say that a good man was hard to find. He said to me: "They must be blind or must not be looking in the right places, 'cause I'm a good man and they could find me if they'd just stop looking down their noses and acting so kinky."

Without mentioning Rollo's name, I told my friend Eloise what he had said. Eloise's response was: "Good men are hard to find. They are as rare as a hen's teeth. I've been in Washington for nine years, and I haven't met one man who was worth the salt you put on a tomato."

Eloise shook her head and continued: "All the jokers I meet are either married and cutting out on me and their wives, or just got out of jail, or strut around like some dime-store Romeo or a jacking Casanova, and come on to me like they're my last chance. I ain't nobody's last chance!"

Many women often complain about the paucity or lack of a good man around. Thus, men in general and Washington, D.C. men in particular are given the reputation of not being a good man in the sense that they would fit the bill as "Mister Right" for a lady who aspires to a meaningful, honest romantic relationship.

I decided to check with Rollo to find out why he thought that women had this universal attitude that there are no more good men to be found.

"They're crazy!" said Rollo, as his eyes shot fire and the veins stuck out on his neck. "They've got their nerve' calling somebody a dime-store Romeo." Rollo was really hot under the collar and went on to tell me: "Listen, Pardner: this girl told me how lonely she was. She told me that she didn't know one lonely blessed man in the city, let alone date anybody.

"Well, she invited me over to her pad to watch TV and drink a little beer. While I was there, that lonely, lonesome honey got five phone calls. I could tell by the way she was purring like a kitten, and how she went limp, and how she cooed on the phone, and kept referring to me as 'just a friend' that she wasn't talking to her dear, sweet momma from Bebop, Georgia.
