CRIME DIGEST

This Crime Digest will be a regular part of the Baltimore AFRO's news emphasis on positive crime reporting. This section will deal with criminal activity in the Baltimore area as well as what citizens are doing to combat crime.

It is hoped Crime Digest will give guidance, information and encouragement and will be helpful to people who have had enough of crime.

It will appear each Tuesday!

Word to the Wise...

Since most assault and robbery episodes occur in areas where there is little lighting, few pedestrians, hiding places which have easy access to the street, and happen mostly to victims who are alone, Crime Digest suggests that in order to reduce the likelihood of being ssaulted and robbed, our readers do the following:

Travel in well lighted areas as when possible with companions whenever possible avoid walking on poorly lit streets; when it is not possible to do so, walk as close to the curb as possible in order to avoid walking near alleys, hedges and doorways.

Do your part to reduce crime by not giving anyone an easy opportunity to make you his victim.

Most wanted

The most wanted escapee in Baltimore at this time is George Green. He is considered very dangerous and anyone seeing him should report it to the police department immediately. Take no action on your own.

In 1962, George Green along with his cousin was sentenced to serve two consecutive life terms in the Maryland State Penitentiary for the slaying of two employees of the Great American Melting Pot Restaurant.

On April 19, 1962, Green in the company of several other prisoners, was taken to the University of Maryland Hospital, on Green Street. During the transfer of the prisoners from the jail van to the hospital George disappeared.

In Focus

Crime is a very large five-letter word that has sent shock waves of fear throughout the Baltimore Community. It no longer is the exclusive concern of the poor, upon whom it is most often visited, but also has become the concern of the well-to-do.

Many communities are banding together to deal with this problem.

In the last couple of years, a number of programs started by citizens groups and other interested parties have as their focus the prevention of crimes through community involvement.

During the next few months, this column will highlight these efforts.

One of these efforts, the Neighborhood Watch Program, is run by the Baltimore City Police Department in cooperation with the citizens of Baltimore.

The program orginally was funded by a Law Enforcement Assistance Administration grant which came through the National's Sheriff's Association in 1976.

Under the administration of former police commissioner, Donald Pomerlou, the program did not fare well. It appeared to be a loosely organized and lacked a real purpose.

Since the advent of the administration of Commissioner of Police Frank J. Battaglia, the program literally has taken off.

Part of the take-off can be found in two events: Baltimoreans changing attitudes about crime and the zeal of the two men charged with running Neighborhood Watch — Capt. Mervin Spiwak and Sgt. Robert Lasshan.

When the two came to the program in 1981, it had 65 members. Statistics compiled at the end of December show the current membership figure of Neighborhood Watch at 22,220.

"We have been very pleased with the way the public has responded to the program" Spiwak said who is a 20-year veteran of the Baltimore police force.

"The community's response was more than we had expected and we are grateful for it. It gives the department the edge it needs to combat preventable crimes."

The 43-year-old captain pauses to light his ever present pipe and his assistant Sgt. Lasshan continues.

"By preventable crimes we mean crimes like burglary, assault and robbery, car theft and larceny. These are crimes about which the individual can take preventive measures."

Both men attribute the program's growing success to the use of identification numbers instead of names.

Citizens participating in the program are known only by their Neighborhood Watch number. Their identity is kept secret.

"People are less fearful of identifying criminal activity if they know that they don't have to give their names or become involved in the court action after the arrest is made," Spiwak said. "That's why we go to great lengths to keep our members identities secret."

The identities of Neighborhood Watch participants are known only to two people, the Community Relations Sergeants in their specific police districts and Capt. Spiwak.

The program's detractors have said it is not effective, that the name Neighborhood Watch is a misnomer because all of the people who are supposed to be watching are not.

One person, who asked not to be named, put it this way.

"People are not home all day and those that are don't spend thir time looking out the window for crooks."

On the other hand, both Spiwak and Lasshan insist the people who are involved are doing a good job.

"Sure we have some members who are more reliable, who put more into it than others," the captain acknowledges. "But every member has the potential to be helpful and many have. Each one of those that are don't spend their time looking out the window for crooks."

Lasshan adds quickly his observations.

"Some of the police districts have a tremendous amount of geography to cover. They can't be as effective as they can be if citizens don't help out.

"Crime is everybody's problem, not just the police officers. If people see criminal action and report it to us, we can respond to crime in a more concentrated manner.

"It's like the sheriffs in those old western movies, the people told them where the trouble was they went out to handle it," Lasshan said.

Next week we will explore the success of the Neighborhood Watch Program and what citizens can do to help fight crime. Meanwhile, anyone interested in joining Neighborhood Watch can call this 24-hour number, 396-2702.

Crime Fighter of the Week

Mrs. Jo Edmonds (not her real name) is a retired school teacher, who lives alone now that her husband is dead and her children are grown. She lives in a nice neighborhood with well kept lawns and clean streets.

She probably has made her contribution to the neatness of the block which she resides. At any rate, if she has not made a contribution to its neatness, she certainly has made one to its safety.

Not long ago, Mrs. Edmonds looked from her window and observed three teenagers acting suspiciously outside one of her neighbors homs. Being a member of the Neighborhood Watch Program, she called the police.

The police arrived and arrested the youth, who denied wrong doing. The arresting officer, in order to confirm criminal activity, called the station house to find out who had made the call.

Finding it had been a Neighborhood Watch call, the precinct public relations sergeant was asked to call the watcher and learn from her what the suspects did during the break-in.

The watcher described to the officer exactly who did what and the sergeant relayed this information to the arresting officer.

As a result of her activity and the quick work of the police in this situation, the three teens were charged with breaking and entering.

Warren Weaver set for enshrinement

Induction of 4 next week

One-time tennis star Warren Weaver has been tapped as one of four athletes and former athletes elected to the State of Maryland Athletic Hall of Fame.

Weaver, recently retired from chairmanship of the Baltimore Chapter of the Maryland Red Cross, will be inducted at a noon luncheon Monday, Feb. 21, at Martin's West.

Inducted at the same time will be John J. Long, Alton C. Pierson, and Patricia A. Stephens.

Weaver joins the late William "Babe" Jones, who was a basketball and football star, as well as an outstanding tennis contemporary; the late Joe Gans, perhaps the greatest lightweight fighter of all time; and three former track Olympians, sprinter Art Bragg and distance stars Nick Lee and Bill Brown in the shrine.

At the peak of his career, Weaver, now 66-years-old, played in the shadow of bigotry as did all black athletes prior to the fifties.

As was Jones, his partner in many triumphs, Weaver was limited to virtually all-black competition, but he excelled as a player and as a person.

And, as was the case with all young black athletes of the era, Weaver emerged from meagre beginnings.

Warren Weaver

This was especially true in Baltimore where they honed their skills on makeshift courts in a remote section of Druid Hill Park next to a cemetery.

In announcing the choices of the new members, Sam Silber, president of the Hall of Fame Committee, said of Weaver:

"Comparing black and white players of his time was all but impossible because they didn't compete against each other as they do now. However, Weaver's record, we feel, merits the honor. The Maryland Hall of Fame, like the Baseball Hall of Fame, is making a concerted effort to honor outstanding eligible black athletes who were denied equal opportunity to participate in integration."

Only native Marylanders or foreign-born athletes who have made Maryland their adopted state are eligible for the Hall of Fame.

Weaver was Maryland's junior singles champion in 1931, 1932 and 1933. For the next three years he was the Maryland men's singles titleholder. He was also the men's doubles champ in 1934 and 1935.

Weaver's skills also earned him the men's singles championship of Pennsylvania (1936), New England (1936), North Carolina (1937) and Washington, D.C. (1935, 1936). As a junior player, he won singles honors in New Jersey (1931) and Virginia (1932).

In 1937, Warren won both the singles and doubles championships of the Central Intercollegiate Athletic Association.

Weaver was runner-up in the National Junior Championships in 1934 and was ranked sixth nationally in men's singles in 1935, '36 and '37. He and William (Babe) Jones were third-ranked in doubles.

Long, born June 6, 1906 in Cumberland, was a standout in football, basketball and baseball for three years at Catholic University (Washington) during the 1920s. He earned nine letters at CU, having been captain and leading scorer on the school's most celebrated basketball team, the "Five Reindeer." He was also high scorer in the Washington-Baltimore area for two straight seasons.

Pierson, born Sept. 29, 1922 at Grasonville, has been recognized by the Union of International Motor Boating of Brussels, Belgium, as the holder of world records for 136 and 280-cubic inch hydroplanes. He owns the best marks in five-mile competition and one-mile at straightaway for each class.

A member of powerboat racing's exclusive 100-mile-per-hour club, Pierson was voted by fellow drivers as the outstanding power-boat pilot in the country in 1958. POPULAR BOATING MAGAZINE also named him Man of the Year in 1958. He is listed in Who's Who in Power Boat Racing.

Stephens becomes only the fifth female in the 36-year history of the Maryland Hall of Fame to win enshrinement. The first was Lenore (Kight) Wingard, a world-class swimmer (1960). The others were bowler Toots Barger (1961) and golfers Mrs. Maurice Glick (1977) and Mary Ann Downey (1979).

Born Nov. 26, 1928 in Baltimore, Stephens reached the pinnacle in badminton when she won the 1948 All-England mixed-doubles championship. That was tantamount to the world championship.

Dailey's escape rests in apology to nurse

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Quintin Dailey of the Chicago Bulls, who assaulted a nursing student last year at the University of San Francisco, will make a public apology to the woman, her lawyer says.

Joseph O'Sullivan, who represents Victoria Brick, said he and Dailey's attorney nearly have reached an out-of-court settlement, but the apology was the concession Brick had wanted.

"Part of the settlement will be a public apology," O'Sullivan said Tuesday.

He said his client also will receive money money to forego a trial and settle the civil suit she filed Oct. 12 against Dailey, the university and S. G. Yasinitsky, the school's security chief.
