the kids and teachers see value in. The students are positive and so are the parents," says art teacher James Williams. Eighth grade math teacher Miss Maureen Newkirk who accompanied her class for their picture taking session agreed.

"I think for the most part students are very enthusiastic about it. We have no problems about them not wanting to wear them."

But despite the school's new efforts to protect its students, problems persist for the West Baltimore school.

While the gaily-colored green orange and blue doors of the front entrance are all locked from the outside, students can still open the unattended doors and let in a friend.

Although two-parent volunteers sit at sign-in desk about 50 feet from the entrance, during the AFRO's tour the desk was seen vacant at one point.

When told of this, the principal said the parents had probably gone to lunch and took steps to resolve the problem.

One youngster seen roaming the halls by an AFRO reporter was asked if he had a hall pass.

"No," he said.

When asked why he was walking the halls he replied, "I got put out of class."

When asked why he didn't go to the office, he responded, "What? And get suspended?" as he continued on his way down the hall.

Many students were observed walking the halls, some even wearing the satin jackets that are so popular among black teenage boys in Baltimore.

"There are still lots of jackets. The students call them death jackets." Most of them say they're not going to stop wearing them," said one Harlem Park teacher after trying to supervise some wandering students who refused to identify themselves.

"The I.D. cards will be helpful. If a person can't identify themselves, you will be able to call security. Some kids won't identify themselves. It's wild."

One student whom AFRO reporters saw repeatedly in various parts of the building and who wore a satin team jacket said that Georgetown University basketball coach John Thompson sent a letter of sympathy to the school after Duckett's death.

The teenager said that he did not feel afraid wearing the jacket because "If it's time for my life to be up, then..." then shrugged his shoulders.

Harlem Park security officers were seen making the rounds of the maze-like building, but security is stymied by the design of the building- with its long isolated hallways and many stairwells- and the large number of students and entrances are prohibitive.

"I feel threatened," said one female teacher. "I lock myself in my room and lock the kids in too. When a student came to my door to take the class down to have their I.D. photos taken I wouldn't let him in."

Another teacher mentioned that there were two other incidents at the school— one involving a student robbed of his tennis at gunpoint and a girl allegedly raped in the hallway "where no one goes" that were reportedly covered up even before the Duckett murder.

When the I.D. cards have been given to all the students and faculty, school officials hope the process of identifying trespassers and errant students will be made easier.

Students who forget to wear their cards on a particular day will be issued temporary cards for the day, according to the principal.

"We won't be sending them home," says Covert. "Youngsters these days are very creative, and if they wanted a day off they would leave the cards home."

He adds that it will be impossible to check the students for cards as they enter the school in the morning, therefore there will be regular homeroom checks.

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY
FASHION BALL

The Baltimore Metropolitan Cancer Society Fashion Ball Committee has been given the green light to become an approved fund-raising event statewide, according to Arnold Amass, Chairman of the Board of the Society's Maryland division.

"Our committee is delighted — really enthusiastic — about this approval," said Imogene Johnson chairman of the Fashion Ball Committee. "Being designated a fund-raising event for the entire state, the Ball can now draw upon talent from the Atlantic Ocean to Garrett County."

—Greyhound strikers

Strikers are also in array about no discussions centered around improving the inconsistency of presently existing Greyhound policies.

Among the many referred to, there is the pension system that allows the greatest amount of pension benefits to go to those who make the higher salary.

Also, various inconsistencies in the health plans such as the three-day waiting clock for some and not others have resulted up workers.

Local representatives, once urging striking employees to reject the latest proposal, have reconsidered and are suggesting that each employee make his own decision.

Today marks the 36 day of the walk-out by some 12,700 Greyhound employees on Nov. 3 in response to company demands to accept wage and benefit cuts.

The effectiveness of picket lines has hurt Greyhound's effort to move buses in spite of the striking workers.

Already passengers and striking workers have become alarmed at Greyhounds attempt to run buses without what the union has termed as "experienced drivers when 28-year-old Lewis Harris of Cleveland was killed by a trainee.

Union and company officials are looking forward, however, to some type of contractual agreement by Christmas.

—Lafayette Mkt.

New York. When they first built the subway the market (Lafayette) was doing a better business from the construction workers. It's a funny thing being a black businessman in a black area," says Henry Shippe.

Others blame the decline on the disruptive mess that was created during the subway's construction. According to merchants, the streets were torn up and many of their houses were demolished, causing that convenience factor, which they consider to be of prime importance to blacks, to have been irradicated, permanently.

Lena Boone, exec. director of the Upton Planning Committee, while sympathetic to the business community's concerns, believes that the needs of the large concentrations of elderly and the poor, is a greater far reaching issue.

She feels that the problem lies in people's tendency to judge the entire 183-acre area only on the basis of Pennsylvania Avenue.

"It's a little bit too early to tell what the impact has been. We weren't only considering the business area; we were considering how it would service the 14,000 people, many of whom are seniors.

"Pennsylvania is just one street. I have to think in terms of all the people. I can't just think of Upton as only three blocks, it does not just start at Wilson and end at Laurens."

She maintains that once the subway extends its service to the weekends, the lot of the businesses there will be improved.

But Arthur Taylor, like others, remembers the visitors who can and made promises. "They had a meeting and a representative from the MTA said there'd be a increase. I figured though that they'd go down to Lexington."

Though most of the regulars, who are older, are still coming, it just doesn't seem to be enough.

Says MTA spokeswoman Jane Howard, "You have to look at more than just the first few weeks. We haven't been able to determine ridership patterns."

An additional cause for the market's demise has also been cited. "The problem is that nobody knows Upton. It's the name of a couple of apartments. It throws people off..., they know Lafayette. They should have called it Lafayette Market Station or Lafayette Station, like Lexington. Upton, who knows Upton?" asks partners, William Claudie and Kevin Peterson of William and Kevin Meats.
