District. A bail hearing was set and Johnson will be returned to City Jail awaiting additional charges of flight to avoid prosecution.

Johnson was being held in City Jail charged with failure to appear in court when he escaped with three other inmates. Thus far two of the inmates that escaped have been apprehended. Johnson, however was considered the least dangerous of the four escapees.

The smooth arrest of Johnson followed closely on the heels of the capture of John C. Booth on Dec. 14, while he leisurely sat having a drink in a local tavern called the Hee Haw at 900 W. Baltimore Street.

However, unlike Johnson, Booth was considered the most dangerous of all the four inmates that escaped from City Jail. He denied his identity when undercover officers approached him to ask him his name. Police said he had arrest records under the names of both John Booth and Marvin. A brief struggle began between the arresting officers and two patrons who tried to interfere with the arrest.

One eyewitness said that he saw one of the officers pull his revolver and place it to Booth's head, asking him not to resist anymore. Then they put the handcuffs on him and took him out of the bar.

Police reported they found a hypodermic syringe and a bottle cap, believed used to cook heroin before injecting it into the vein in Booth's possession.

According to the police informant who remains anonymous "John Booth was not the kind of person that understood the difference between right and wrong. If he was a thorough brother, then I may have had some compassion for his situation. But knowing that he wasn't I knew that he would be nothing but trouble for me and the people that I love."

"Another thing, John's real name is not Marvin C. Booth. Marvin is the name of his younger brother that died as a child. John would use Marvin's name when ever he got into trouble with the man. Even the news accounts that John was in D.C., were wrong. Everybody around here knew that he was living up there in the 1400 block V'. Baltimore Street," the source said.

Charles Blunt, the owner of the Hee Haw Tavern, a local gathering place for many of the residents in that part of town, said," When I first noticed John, he was sitting with his legs out in the aisles, with his head bent down and a drink in his hand. I asked him to move his feet out of the way, because my customers couldn't get around them. He did what I said, because he knew that I would have turned him in if he had started anything in my bar. That would have been all that I needed to know that it was him after all."

Blunt also added, "When the police entered they approached the bar and began to mingle with the other customers. After they spotted John they left and two black undercover officers returned.

"When they walked up to John and asked him if he was Marvin a struggle began because John denied that it was him. Some drunk started to question the officers, who again identified themselves, handcuffed John and removed him from the bar. They thanked everyone as they left the Hee Haw."

The two remaining escapees were identified as George Miller, 27, of Washington, who was awaiting trial on bank robbery charges: Millers' wife Kimmie Rene, was arrested several days later when she surrendered to city police on charges of aiding and abetting the escapees- and fourth escapee Moses B. Taylor, 31, of the 1800 block of Whitmore Ave, who was being held on 24 counts of armed robbery are still on the lose.

Police arrested Booth's wife, Jewell, 22, in an apartment about four blocks from the jail last week. She is charged with aiding and abetting the escape, and for a federal warrant for unlawful flight to avoid prosecution. Ms Booth is also charged with being an accessory to the Bronstein murders.

pany," said Frank Just, C&P spokesman.

Meanwhile both companies expecting to suffer a loss from the separation have requested rate hikes from the Public Service Commission.

On Wednesday, the commission approved AT&T's request to control long distance calls in the state, and it gave them the proposed rate increase they wanted. However, a decision has not been made at this point on C&P's request.

C&P officials, arguing vehemently that a hike is needed, said that the breakup of AT&T removed subsidies that long distance rates had provided to them to keep local phone rates low. Now with the breakup, they can no longer afford to operate in the same financial brackett.

An increase that would raise flat rate service from $11.82 to $21.30 a month has frightened many C&P customers who fear their service would be discontinued if the hike is approved.

Lynn Troup, spokeswoman for C&P, said that it's really not as frightening as people think. "It's a matter of looking at the options for various services."

If the Commission does approve the rate hike increase by January 1 as believed.

Flat rate service, where a customer can make an unlimited amount of calls. will rise from $11.82 to $21.30.

Message rate service, where a customer is allowed 65 calls a month with an additional nine cents charge for every call over the 65 limit, will rise from $8.82 to $9.70 ·

The economy service will rise from $4.42 to $5.90.

"Really what is happening is that C&P is moving telephone rates towards what it costs us to operate special programs. AT&T allowed us to be cheaper. That is not so any longer," it's not that bad. For example, most people don't make more than 65 calls a month, but even if they did, let's say 85, they would still be paying less than the required $21.30 for the flat rate service.

"Even if they made 193 calls, they would still not be paying the $21.30. What needs to happen is that people must reexamine their method of using the phone. They really make less calls than they think."

Whether C&P gets its hike is still in the air, but either way, Baltimoreans are in for an interesting change in their phone system.

NUL has considered ways to turn the bleak picture around. Put Jacobs believes that this initiative must be generated from within and, that the black community must develop the kind of power that will put into action the types of services and programs that are both sensitive and unique to the needs of blacks.

"If we cannot change it then the black community might as well jump into the harbor. We are trying to take back the community," Jacobs remarked.

By mobilizing the institutions in the community; by involving the black middle class and re-defining the quality of education, and by offering job training opportunities, child care and employment, NUL believes the problems can be solved.

During a more indept interview with the AFRO, Jacobs delved deeper and refined some of his earlier points.

"I don't want to give the impression that blacks are creating this problem - the deterioration of the family. Starting back with slavery and the separation of families and people. America has never meant for us to have a family scheme.

"America has never provided the climate to enhance stability in the black community. The big story is not that we have 55-56 percent black singled headed families. The big story is that we have more than 44 percent of families who have maintained themselves in a system devised to destablize.

"I don't know the great motivation that lead to the Sun paper doing what it did. What I caution is that black America must not get the message confused with the messenger We (NUL) have been talking about the problem for two years

"The broader portion of the population was interested. Now that the white media has taken an interest...everyone is now interested. It seems to me as an institution in the community the NUL has to be responsible enough to charge the other institutions and itself with the obligation to say, "What can we do about this problem."

"I'm not suggesting that what we (NUL) propose is unique. What I am suggesting is that we hold institutions accountable to solving the problems. We're also saying that the black community has to provide the leadership. When we allow others to do, they either don't do it or they don't do it very well.

"What I see to be the trend is that black people are coming together to deal with our community and the outside forces are being brought into after we have taken on the initiative for ourselves."

Black political group gets grant

The Joint Center for Political Studies, Inc. (JCPS), a national organization that encourages minority involvement in the political process, has been given a $7,500 grant for its programs.

In making the grant, Marshall B. Bass, vice president of R.J. Reynolds Industries, Inc., said JCPS continues to promote informed and effective involvement of minorities in the political process.

"The Center's most recent publication, A Policy Framework for Racial Justice,' is a timely and important statement on the new perspectives needed to deal with racial problems in the 1980s," Bass said.

JCPS was founded in 1970 to study public policy issues of concern to minority Americans. It monitors minority political participation and provides information to elected and appointed officials on issues related to minority and low-income Americans.

The Washington-based organization has examined energy policies, inner-city food distribution, metropolitan migration trends and other issues of concern to minorities.
